If I was called a faggot again, something I don't even know... Well, I don't have a decent threat. What can you do? Online multiplayer is terrific when enjoyed with friends. When your friends are not online, when you are all night on insomnia and want to play Quake Live or Left 4 Dead or anything on Xbox Live 4AM, when you have to play with a lot of strangers, life can really start to suck. Get ready to be random, verbally abused for no real reason. Get ready to hear the profanity that has been shaken by the uncomfortable, teenage voices. Even if you're not using VOIP, get ready to see hasty insults entered or, worse, macro-recorded insults that are quick to you as quickly as immature fingers can make them. There's something about perceived anonymity that puts some people at the worst. I don't want pigeon teenyboppers, as I met a very nice 12-year-old, but they seem the worst of the lot, at least according to my admitted unscientific study. It consists of counting how often voices call me a very, very naughty word-crack as they hurl curse. I have no charges against almost anyone who plays online through matchmakers like GameSpy Arcade, Steam, built-in server browsers, or whatever. I made good online friends during random matchups. But I'm on the verge of quitting playing online with strangers all over quickly because I get sick of the abuse that quickly cancels out the fun. As fast as losers are banned, they open new accounts and log back up. As often as the ESRB rates games M, kids get their hands on them anyway. Why do they feel a desire to sling dirt on all they meet online? Is it just bad nature? Bad parenting? Society's inability of a certain kind? The worst of them reacts to everything with a composite word that starts with M, it contains an F and ends with ER, even if you're trying to think of them. You can't reason with a four-year-old, and it's about the mentality of morons that ruin matchups for those of us who act our age. Continue...
