Callaway big bertha adjustment guide

With all the new golf technologies on the market today, it is not easy to decipher all the components that now go into the assembly of golf clubs, especially the manoly capabilities of weight and loft. Finding the right settings for your swing can often be a tedious and time-consuming task. However, compared to where we started just 4-5 years ago without adjustability options, it provides today's golfer with an advantage of sewing a club to its respective games. Today, we look at Callaway's Big Bertha Alpha 815 driver and how you can make it fit your needs. Opti-Fit Hosel Technology This system allows you to adjust the club's loft, from the standard printed loft on top of the club, minus 1, plus 1 or plus 2. Also integrated into this hosel is the angular bias. There is a standard lie and a biased lie aimed at the club to the left of a intended goal and create more right-to-left spins. With 8-way adjustment, you're sure to find the right option for you. Gravity Core Controls Spin Callaway's Gravity Core was first introduced to the Big Bertha Alpha driver a few years ago and allows players to tweak the rotation profile of the head of the club with a 10.5 gram tungsten head combined with a 1.5 gram nylon head. By placing the bar in the head with the heavier tungsten head towards the crown (also known as the high CG setting), the club will play as a mid-rotation driver. On the flip side, with the low CG position of tungsten towards the base, it will reduce spin and increase forgiveness. The movement of this core weight system can affect the rotation speed of the driver's head up to +/- 300RPM (depending on the player). Perimeter weight for final directional control, the Big Bertha Alpha 815 has two able weights, the circaferth is placed on the heel and the base's legs for greater flexibility. The driver comes with two weights, a plug of 1 gram and 7 grams, each of which can be flipped from the sides of the base. If you are looking for more than a Draw bias for golfers that miss too many shots on the right, position 7g plugged into the heel and 1g plus in the legs. This will allow clubs to square up more through impact and reduce the left-to-right spin placed on golf balls. Conversely, if you are looking for an extra neutral/fading bias, move the 1g plug to the heel and 7g to the legs.
