

How to find residual value of car

May 23, 2013 When buying a new car, most people don't think about what it will be worth five, 10, 15 years from now when you decide to sell it. The harsh reality is when you drive that shiny new car from the dealer lot, the resale value automatically starts to decline, and the truth is – some cars hold their value much better than others due to popularity, maintenance, miles per gallon, and other factors. BankRate.com recently came out with a list of what they consider to be the cars with the best resale value. On the list - Honda Fit, Lexus GS 350, and Toyota FJ Cruiser. These cars are expected to retain the highest percentage of the manufacturer's recommended retail price after three years. And no matter what new car you plan to buy, be sure to use the free CarWoo Deal Finder to maximize your overall savings. Let's talk about it with Autoblog's Greg Migliore. That's right, Adam. And thank you for having me back. Depreciation is basically the amount of value that your car loses the moment you drive it out of the lot. So we've examined some data from ICcar.com - they're experts in this - and trying to gather some trends and figure out which ones lose value the most and which ones hold their value best. In general, trucks, SUVs, quite good, especially if you go with kind of brands like Toyota, Honda, Jeep that have good reputation and are desirable. Other brands are not doing so well. During the break you mentioned how luxury sedans are actually pretty good after a few years out. One of the cars that keeps its value at least- it's kind of awkward way of saying it, but you get what I'm saying is the best of the BMW 7 Series. You lose 73% of your value after five years. So I think it's good, too. It's a great car. And I would drive a 2015 BMW 7 Series that you could get for $21,000. It seems like a pretty good deal just to look at the listings. SEANA SMITH: Greg, interesting here among the cars that appeared in the bottom 10. I'm curious why that is. Why is it – I think why did it lose its value so much faster than some of its peers in this category? GREG MIGLIORE: That's a big question. And Leaf is actually a unique case. Nissan has done a good job of keeping it updated. And of course it's still a very interesting electric car. That said, it's a pretty small car. It doesn't fit the lifestyle many people will actually need it for. You can get things that are bigger and offer greater reach, for that matter, for about the same price or maybe a little bit more. For me, the Leaf is a kind of car, it's a good commuter car. It's good for driving around relatively short distances. It's a pretty good deal. If you just need to drive maybe 15, 20 miles a car that I think time and technology have kind of car, it's a pretty good deal. If you just need to drive maybe 15, 20 miles a car that I think time and technology have kind of car, it's a pretty good deal. If you just need to drive maybe 15, 20 miles a car that I think time and technology have kind of car, it's a pretty good deal. day and you want to do it on electricity, you can get a steal for one of them. ADAM SHAPIRO: Well, how about - when you say that something like the Jeep Wranglers, what does it really mean that it holds its value? It will definitely write off. It just will write off less than, maybe, some other vehicles out there. In the case of Jeep, they are good vehicles. They are hard and hard vehicles. They are not necessarily the most reliable vehicles. But they are highly sought after. There will always be a market for Jeep Wrangler. De is, again, very skilled. And people want them, whether you take them out of the way or not. So there is definitely a resale market for them as well. Greg, how quickly do cars lose their value? I know you hear right, when you drive the car away from the lot, it is already written off in value. Is there any truth in that? GREG MIGLIORE: Oh, absolutely. I mean, basically, the moment you cross the curb, your car goes from what you paid sticker to more like a wholesale value kind of price. And then after five years, you can look at anything from 10% to 50% or more of the value of your car falling. So really, five years is a good barometer, too, because it's a lot of time when you start thinking, hey, I want to do something else. So that's one of the reasons why we look at it that way Adam Shapiro: Can I just -- because I love this discussion. I go nuts over flipping cars all the time. Jaguars, I know people are afraid of Jaguars. Best deal I've ever done was a Jaguar XK8 convertible. It was an $80,000 cars. I got it for $12,000, 34,000 miles on it because they don't hold their value because people are afraid of them. Is that still the case with Jaguar? Because there are some nice Jags out there. Jaguars are a little up and down. I'll say this - XK8, it's a really good move, in my opinion. It's the X-type from the same era, you'd stay away from those things. They weren't that good. But yes, the Jaguars are a little up and down. I mean, really, they're in a different place now as a car company, too. They are really getting into electrification and their interior is much better. And they are a little more reliable than perhaps their story and their reputation would make you believe at this point. If you want luxury, top of the line back in 1964. I can get you $1,000. GameStop (GME) shares closed 51% higher at $65.01 each on Friday after an apparent crush on short-sellers. Humans are entering a new age. (Bloomberg) - Thanks to the vagaries of the accounting world, Donald Trump's administration had a chance in the final weeks of the presidential race to cancel more than $200 billion of student loans without immediate hit to the Department of Education's massive portfolio. But it didn't. Maybe Joe Biden will. For years, bean counters at the department have been writing down the value of its $1.4 trillion portfolio of student debt as they adopted increasingly pessimistic views on how much borrowers will repay. In September, analysts made their biggest adjustment yet, valuing loans of just 82 cents on every dollar owed, down from 104 cents in 2015, records show. The debt is now worth $258 billion less than the outstanding amount. Had officials under Education Secretary Betsy DeVos decided to identify some of the borrowers least likely to repay, and then forgiven that debt, it would not have put a big dent in the remaining portfolio value. In theory, such losses were already reflected in any case. By Wall Street standards, government loan writedowns are gigantic, equivalent to $98 billion in September alone. While they have gone almost certain to attract attention now, as consumer advocates urge Biden's new administration to ease the burden on young professionals and kickstart the pandemic-hit economy. Some have begun to ask: If the government doesn't expect to collect hundreds of billions of dollars from borrowers, why not try to delete it now? Betsy DeVos has already that a lot of this debt is not that should be paid back, said Mike Pierce, director of policy at the nonprofit Student Borrower Protection Center and a former official at the federal Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. That makes it much easier for the Biden administration to justify the cancellation. Loans or RentShortly after his inauguration as U.S. president on Wednesday, Biden asked the department to expand his predecessor's pandemic policy to waive interest rates and to continue to let borrowers skip monthly payments, department data shows. Biden has expressed sympathy for borrowers, but suggested he is reluctant to wipe away debt without an action from Congress. In November, he said student-loan burdens are keeping people up. They're in trouble. They have to make choices between paying off their student loans and paying their rent. While Wall Street often values its debt holdings based on the prices they would fetch in the market, the government's markdowns primarily reflect amounts that are not expected to be recovered. From a valuation perspective, this means there wouldn't be much immediate difference between forgiving doomed loans and waiting for borrowers, it can create an incentive for others to stop repaying too, causing more of the portfolio to sour. Rush for ReliefMuch of the gap between what's due and what the government reckons will be repaid stems from loan programs that cap monthly payments relative to borrowers' incomes. Income-based repayment plans promise the possibility of loan forgiveness after two decades of steady payment, or a decade for public employees. As annual borrower defaults climbed past 1 million, Barack Obama's administration made repayment plans increasingly generous. Enrollment has tripled since 2014.De projected cost of income-based plans has also increased. The Education Department recently realized borrowers in the plans were earning significantly less than it had expected. Then the government cut its projections of borrowers' future income by 35%, increasing the estimated tab to be forgiven in recent years. There is already significant loan forgiveness, said Constantine Yannelis, who researches student debt and teaches finance at the University of Chicago's Booth School of Business. We're just talking about moving it up or giving it to borrowers who wouldn't qualify for it under the current rules. Yannelis said he recently found that the debt is due to lower borrowers had a lower present value to the federal government than debts Borrowers. Increasing OddsAcross-the-board loan cancellations doesn't make much sense, but the government than debts Borrowers. Increasing OddsAcross-the-board loan cancellations doesn't make much sense, but the government than debts Borrowers. loans dates to his time as a tax official at the U.S. Treasury. In fact, he said, the Education Department's own valuation reflects a belief that the government will eventually cancel out large amounts that people earn little or at least too little relative to their debt. Forgiving loans may encourage future students to over-borrow on hopes that their debts will be wiped out, advisers to the federal consumer bureau warned in a report this month. And that, in turn, could remove some of the pressure on colleges to lower their costs. But there is a growing public expectation that emergency aid is on the way. In a December survey conducted by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, respondents estimated there is a 39% chance - more than ever in five years of voting - that the federal government will cancel a certain amount of student loans over the next year. While their Congress and the White House to cast tie-breaking votes in a 50-50 chamber - Democrats have the votes needed to push through their legislative agenda. And part of that agenda is federal cannabis law. Don't expect it to happen right away, since Congress and President Biden will have plenty of other priorities to deal with first. But Governor Andrew Cuomo of New York, a leading politician in the Wing, promised state-level legalization in its state of the state address – and like California, New York tends to be a trendsetter. In addition, Biden has tapped federal Judge Merrick Garland as his choice to lead the Department of Justice; Garland is generally seen as a centrist, but he has a legal record from the federal bench for respecting state-level cannabis legalization regimes. AzurRx BioPharma (AZRX) We start with a company specializing in gastrointestinal disease, AzurRx. This company is focused on creating non-systemic, targeted recombinant treatments for GI disorders. The key pipeline candidate, MS1819, is being studied as a treatment for exocrine pancreatic insufficiency for also suffer from cystic fibrosis. MS1819 is a lipase, derived from a yeast strain. The drug is designed to target fat molecules in the digestive tract, allowing patients to absorb the degraded fats for nutritional value. The drug is currently in phase 2 trials, which are scheduled for completion in the first half of this year. As of January 1, the first two patients in the Phase 2b OPTION 2 extension study have been dosed with the treatment and the Data Monitoring Committee (DMC) continues to support the program. In another important development, AzurRx announced earlier this month that it is entering a partnership with First Wave Bio to study oral and rectal formulation of Niclosamid for the treatment of immune checkpoint inhibitor-associated colitis (ICI-AC) and COVID-19 related gastrointestinal infections. The estimated market for Niclosamid as a treatment for COVID-related GI problems exceeds $450 million. Based on several potentially significant clinical catalysts as well as its $0.98 share price, several members of the Street believe that now is the right time to pull the trigger. Jonathan Aschoff, of Roth Capital, is bullish on AzurRx, basing his long-term forecasts on the likely success of MS1819. We base our valuation for AZRX on anticipated future U.S. sales from MS1819 to the treatment of EPI due to CF and CP, using an initial annual price of approximately $18,000, a price consistent with the currently available PERTs. We project MS1819, to be commercialized in the United States by 2023, generating sales of $272 million by 2030. Ex-U.S. commercial success for MS1819, or commercial success from the early-stage beta-lactamase program would provide the upside to our valuation, Aschoff noted. The analyst also looks forward to the first clinical results of Niclosamid in COVID-19 GI infection and in ICI-AC potentially, adding: Niclosamide was FDA approved in 1982 for the treatment of gut tapeworm infections and is on the World Health Organization's list of essential medicines. Given the millions of patients who have taken the drug, the safety profile has largely been established, which has lowered the development risk. Given all of the above, Aschoff rates AZRX as a purchase, and his $7 price target suggests a sky-high 608% upside for the coming year. (Click here to see Aschoff's results.) Overall, the analyst's consensus on AZRX shares is a strong buy; The stock has 4 reviews recently, including 3 Buys and a single team. Covering the stock for JMP, analyst Jonathan Wolleben points to Sepofarsen as a key element of his bullish thesis. We continue to feel good about the sepofarsen's chance of success in Illuminate for several reasons: 1) Phase 1/2 confirmed target registration dose and dosing interval (6 months); 2) patients had clinically significant and durable BCVA improvements after 12 months – pivotal primary endpoint; 3) supportive secondary efficiency measures (FST, mobility) 4) similar reactions seen in other treated eyes; 5) long-term safety confirms positive risk/benefit and 6) Illuminate patient population was enriched based on phase 1/2 results (baseline vision >/=hand movement). We assign sepofarsen a 60% POS and model LCA10 as a ~$300M option to PRQR on peak penetration, Wolleben believed. So the upcoming earnings will garner well-deserved attention, and Wall Street's top analysts are already publishing their views on some of the market's key components. Using TipRanks' database, we pulled up the details of two members of the FAANG club to find out how Street thinks each will fare when they publish their fourth quarter numbers. According to the platform, both have received plenty of love from analysts, earning a Strong Buy consensus rating. Facebook has also brought us targeted digital marketing and advertising, and mass monetization of the Internet. It has been a profitable strategy for the company. Facebook's market value is $786 billion, and in the third guarter of 2020, the company reported $21.5 billion. This would be in line with the Company's pattern of increasing guarterly results from Q1 to Q4. On the expected amount, revenue would rise 24% year-over-year, largely congruent with 22% year-on-year profit already seen in Q3. The main metric to keep an eye on will be taken as an ominous sign for the company's future. As it stands, Facebook's daily average user number is 1.82 billion. Prior to printing, Oppenheimer analyst Jason Helfstein boosted his price target to $345 (from $300) while repeating an Outperform (i.e. Buy) rating. Investors stand to pocket ~26% gain should the analyst's thesis play out. (Click here to see Helfstein's The 5-star analyst commented, commenting, anticipate 4Q advertising revenue will handily top Street estimates. We now expect 4Q advertising revenue +30% y/y vs. Street's +25% estimate based on a regression of US Standard Media Index Data (r-squared 0.95) and accelerate global CPM data from Gupta Media (4Q +35% y/y vs 3Q's -12%). Additionally, we are very bullish on FB's eCommerce option after conversations with our checks and our first work conservatively estimate Stores is a $25-50B option vs. current $85B revs. We believe shares currently trading at 7.1 x EV/NTM sales offer the most favorable risk/reward in the internet store cap. Overall, the social media empire remains a Wall Street darling, as TipRanks analytics showcase FB as a strong Buy. This is based on 34 recent reviews, which break down to 30 Buy ratings, 3 Holder, and 1 Sell. Shares are priced at $276.10 and the average price target of $327.42 suggests a one-year upside of ~19%. (See FB stock analysis on TipRanks) Amazon. The retail giant has a market value of $1.65 trillion, making it one of just four publicly traded companies valued above the trillion-dollar mark. The company's famous price is famously high, and has grown 74% since this time last year, far surpassing the broader markets. Amazon's growth has been supported by increased online sales activity over the 'corona year.' Globally, online commerce has grown by 27% by 2020, while the overall retail trade has fallen by 3%. Amazon, which dominates the online retail sector, is expected to end 2020 with $380 billion in total revenue, or 34% year-over-year growth, surpassing global e-commerce gains. Cowen analyst John Blackledge, rating 5-stars at TipRanks, covers Amazon and is bullish on the company's prospects ahead of the earnings release. Blackledge rates stock Outperform (i.e. Buy), and his price target, at $4,350, indicates confidence in a 31% upside on the one-year time horizon. (Click here to see Blackledge's track record.) We predict 4Q20 reported revenue of $120.8BN, +38.2% y/y vs+37.4% y/y in 3Q20 led by AWS, advertising, subscription and 3P sales [..] We estimate US Prime sub growth accelerated in 4Q20 (reaching 76MM subs in December '20 and ~74MM on avg in 4Q20), helped by pandemic demand, Prime Day in October, & amp; elongated shopping period, as well as 1 day delivery [...] In '21, we expect that strong top line growth will continue driven by e-commerce (helped by COVID pull forward in Grocery), adv., AWS & amp; sub businesses, Blackledge said. That Wall Street is generally bullish on Amazon is no secret; the company has 33 reviews on record, and 32 of them are Buyer, versus 1 Team. Shares are priced at $3,301.26 and the average price target of $3,826 implies it will grow another 16% this year. In the case of the electric vehicles in the coming years, capitalizing on the incredible success (TSLA) (ticker: TSLA). If the adoption of ev continues to grow at a rapid pace, the charging infrastructure must also keep up with vehicle sales. Elon Musk's Space Exploration Technologies Corp., or SpaceX, plans to drill for natural gas in Texas, Bloomberg reported Friday, citing a hearing before the state's energy regulator. The drilling would take place close to the privately held aerospace company's launch pad and through a SpaceX subsidiary, Lone Star Mineral Development. But it has yet to start because of a dispute with Dallas Petroleum Group, which claims ownership of some inactive wells on the same land, Bloomberg said. Earlier this week, Musk, the electric carmaker Tesla Inc. chief executive, tweeted that he would donate $100 million to the best CARBON capture technology. Musk announced last year that he had moved to Texas, where Tesla is building a factory outside the capital Austin. According to news reports this week, SpaceX, also through the Lone Star Development unit, also recently purchased two oil rigs, likely converting them to support SpaceX's programs, Programs,
