Weight:1630 KG Comments Comments Low-mileage Aston Martin One-77 is on sale in Munich for £2.5 million – almost doubling the original list price of the model. The five-year-old car has just 1,140 miles on the clock and is one of only three One-77s currently known to be on sale. It's car number 67 out of 77, and one of only eight left-hand-drive examples. This rarity helped accelerate the value of the example of white metallic, according to Paul Spires, head of Aston Martin Works. Left-hand-drive cars are rarer, so command a bigger premium, Spires said. But the One-77 is so rare and collectible that I don't see that [growth in values] stopping any time soon. Aston Martin Works recently sold two more One-77s at similar prices, confirming that the low-mileage Munich car asking price is not uncommon. Spires believes that the One-77 is increasingly desirable and cites the fact that owners rarely want to sell their cars as a factor in rocketing the asking price. You have to remember that the owners of these cars do not need money, he said. To lure them into selling, you need to offer a really good premium. If they sell their One-77, what will replace it with what they appreciate so quickly? Spires is so confident in the valuation of the One-77 values that he believes the model could follow the trend set by the Aston Martin DB4 Zagato, which costs around £10 million. Heaven is the limit,' he concluded. But others are not so optimistic. Paul Michaels, chairman of Hexagon Classics, thinks the One-77 is still some way off the most valuable supercars.
