For the standard 2014 calendar, in case your calendar is not finally the arms of the person before January 1, 2014, they could have already found a replacement. For a non-standard calendar, this deadline may be earlier (for example, a calendar of the school year must be in the hands of the user towards the beginning of if it's useful to them). Working backwards from this absolute deadline can give you a timetable for the whole project. How do you get your calendars into the fingers of the consumer tip? Are you giving them? In this case, it should be relatively simple to determine the distribution logistics and decide when you will need to have calendars on hand. Or maybe you send them to your customers or members; in this case, you just need to make sure that you allow enough time to insert into the envelopes, adding a cover letter, address and mailing. Or take into account having the printer or mailhouse area deal with sending calendars - it would in all probability be cheaper and simpler for you. Just make sure to find out from the printer or mailhouse how much extra time they're going to want and the factor in so, again, you intend to print a calendar and promote it, either as a non-profit fundraiser or as a for-profit business, then the distribution is a little more sophisticated. The time you want for gross sales depends on your sales technique. Are you promoting to a local competition or another occasion? If so, then this offers you a deadline, but keep in mind that you will be better off in case you can promote repeatedly, in case attendance or sales at an event are usually not what you expect. Or maybe you volunteer to promote calendars to family and friends or door-to-door. If this is the case, you should allow at least two weeks, preferably up to four weeks, since the volunteers all have their own totally different schedules, and some will want reminders and encouragement. In case you print a calendar that you are simply planning to promote, you should want to develop and implement a solid advertising plan. Advertising does not have to add to the overall period of the draft calendar - you can and can start advertising and marketing during the planning and manufacturing levels of the business. Nevertheless, when you wait to start advertising and marketing until you have the calendars in hand, then you will need to allow at least a few extra weeks, perhaps extra, to your advertising and marketing message to succeed in the supposed audience and motivate them to buy.
