Snapchat is a quick way to send photos, as well as video chat on the go. The photo and video feature means your friends can't share the photos you share via Snapchat. Enjoy fast and fun mobile conversation! Snap a photo or video, add a caption, and send it to a friend. They will show it, laugh and then snap disappears from the screen. You can also add a Snap to your Story the same as Instagram with a tap to share your day with all your friends. Life is more fun when you live in the present. Sign in and Snap your first Snap After you download and install Snapchat, you must first create an account with a valid email address to start. There are no facebook or Google sign-in options. To share items, you don't necessarily need to friend your friends in the Snapchat app. In fact, you can send a snap to anyone, whether it's someone you know or a stranger you've found through Snapchat's search tool. That said, many users adjust their privacy settings to get snaps only from friends, so there's a chance strangers won't get your snaps. Navigate When you open the app, it opens to the camera screen, where you can take a photo or video from either your main camera or front-facing camera. At the bottom of that screen there are two icons, a simple square and a friends tab. Tap the square to view an activity feed with a list of contacts you've sent fortresses to, or that you've received a snap from. In the older version of the app, you can easily respond to someone's snap by double-tapping their name. Now you need to tap their names and simultaneously swipe left. It opens a different page with all the recent activity just between you and that person. As someone who has been using the app for a while, I found this new design frustrating at first, and it remained so even after using it for a few weeks. On the activity page where you can use one of Snapchat's newest features text chats. You can now send an instant message to your Snapchat friends, and while they won't immediately disappear after your friend has read them. They disappear when you leave the conversation or close the app. In my testing, conversations can be confusing. If you leave the app, your friend's messages will disappear from that activity page. You can always enjoy this app along with its filters that will add fun to your image taking and video making activities. But still, you will need to install and see for your own.
