Martha Stewart's Daughter Alexis Puts Village Triplex on the market for $53 million The house consists of four units spanning 9,500 square feet and features six alexis bedrooms not slouch when it comes to house design, as evidenced by triplex's in Manhattan's West Village, which recently put on the market for one another $53 million. The house, consisting of four separate apartments in a Richard Meier-designed building and featuring six bedrooms and a six-and-a-half bathroom, is a dizzying 9,500 square feet, with an additional 600 square feet of outdoor terrace space. Stewart had a hand in almost every detail of the house, from his muted, elegant color palette popping from cornflower blue tile to children's bathroom and Arctic blue to nursery to mid-century inspired furniture and decoration Next to her mother famed for her sense of style. According to the listing, the main living and entertaining floor features 360 degrees of glass walls overlooking the Hudson River to the west, the World Trade Center and the Statue of Liberty to the south, Greenwich Village to the east, and Midtown to the north. A flood of sunshine waters common living spaces, including a library, office, and TV room, as well as a kitchen ideal for entertaining and tasting recipes, with a room-in fridge and two large butler cabinets. The living and dining areas open to two terraces. Up to one floor is that master bedroom, which features a custom-built dressing room lined with anigre wood, a master bathroom, and a gym. Alexis' office is also located on the second floor and revolves around a mid-century office, with only one cupboard available for storage. The extra storage you have, the more things you accumulate, once said Martha Stewart Living. The lower level of the tertiary consists of a rec room and a number of other and various bedrooms, as well as the playroom, where bright wooden toys sit neatly on open built-in shelves with a corkboard support, perfect for sticking up school programs and assignments. I like that it's so great for kids and enjoyable for adults. On the lower level there will also be a washing machine/dryer and a kitchenette. A free floating bronze and terrazzo staircase connects all three levels, but each tier also has its own private entrance. The building itself offers enviable amenities such as 24-hour concierge and concierge service, a fully equipped gym with a 50-foot pool and a professional viewing room. Of the reasons Alexis is considering moving out of the elegant residence, Brown's agent Richard Ziegelasch Harris Stevens said her two children, Truman and Jude, are growing up and would like a space with a courtyard. They will probably look for another thing inside the village with a yard, he said Wall Street Journal. He first bought the four units between 2006 and 2007, spending a total of about $35 million to acquire them all. Frequently asked questions about Alexis Stewart Who is Alexis Stewart?
