Dogs are fantastic hunting companions. Not only do they provide some company, they can help you achieve success in the field. Most hunting dogs are usually found or recovered birds, but some breeds are used in other contexts, such as tracking and the tree of raccoons and other fur-bearing mammals. But no matter what kind of prey you chase, or how you trust your dog to help, you're likely to find that a hunting vest can keep your dog safer and more comfortable while doing its job. There are a number of different types of hunting vests available, so you need to be clear about your goals to get the best model for your pony. Here are the different types of hunting vests, we run some of the things you'll want to look for when choosing and we recommend five of the best options available to help you choose. By the way, if you're interested in getting a hunting dog, check out a selection from our list of the best breeds of hunting. SafetyPUP XD reflective vest [Best high visibility vest] - This orange blaze vest will make it easy to spot your dogs in forests or fields, and is built from durable materials so it will last for years. Browning Neoprene Vest [Best Camouflage Vest] - This is Ideal vest that will help keep your dog warm and protect your chest while still keeping a low profile. Mendota Products Skid Plate [Best Protective Hunting Vest] — This is a large dog vest that requires chest protection while working in the field. It is also orange blaze, to help improve the visibility of your dog. Different types of hunting vests The hunting vests come in a few different styles as they are used and are intended for a few different purposes. Some of the most common ways vest hunting are used for dogs include: Making your dog more visible is obviously imperative that you remain aware of your dog's location in the hunt - you don't want to accidentally hit your dog because you didn't see it. One way to help prevent these eventualities is to fit your dog with a high visibility hunting vest. These vests are usually bright orange or bright green, and are usually lightweight. These types of vests are best suited for mountain bird dogs, as they are allowed to run loose in the same surroundings of which birds will appear in hunters. They can also help keep an eye on tracking dogs as well. Keep your dog warmer Even though most of the hunting dogs tasked with working in the cold weather have a thick coat, some may need some extra help to stay warm. This is especially true for dogs that recover waterfowl, which must jump in the frigid water time and again over the course of the day (hopefully). Hunting vests made for these purposes are usually made of wetsuits as it provides a great fit and retains its ability to warm your dog even when wet. However, vests intended solely for use on dry land can be made of wool or synthetic materials. Note that due to the recovery of waterfowl dogs are rarely near the line of fire, and you don't want to scare them by approaching ducks or goats, these kinds of vests usually have colors and camouflage patterns. Protect your dog from cuts and punctures dogs often have to run through dense and inhospitable vegetation during hunting, and even though their fur provides some protection, punctures, cuts and abrasions are common. But if you provide your dog with a vest designed to protect the chest or abdomen from this type of hazard, you can prevent most of these injuries from ever occurring. These types of vests are often called leather plates, and usually contain some kind of durable plastic material to protect your dog from sharp sticks and thorns. These types of vests are usually orange or some other high visibility color. Increase your dog's buoyancy over the course of a successful hunting day, your dog may have to swim a significant distance. You will also have to jump into the water, negotiate obstacles and swim with a bite of birds and feathers. That is, he's going to have to work hard all day. But you can give your puppy some help and provide an additional measure of security by providing it with hunting vest containing a flotation aid. Often, these vests essentially resemble camouflage life jackets, but usually have some design features that make them particularly suitable for hunting dogs. Protect your dog from the rain Even though most hunting dogs are from the rough and stumbling stumble and not distracted by some rain, it still makes sense to keep them as dry as possible. This will help keep them warmer and more comfortable, which will make sure they work at their best. We've written about dog raincoats before, but game dogs need something that's a little harder and longer lasting than a vest designed for more pedestrian use. You'll want a vest that's made of high-quality materials that won't irritate your dog's body, and you'll usually want it to be orange for the sake of visibility. Some vests can be used simultaneously to help provide the best possible protection. For example, you might want to use a dish-style vest to protect your dog's chest and belly from sticks and vegetation, as well as a light orange vest to improve its visibility (skid dish-style vests rarely cover much of your dog's back, so they don't improve visibility much). You can also wear a camouflaged wetsuit vest while waiting on the blind, but throw a high visibility orange vest over it to keep your dog visible as it heads to and from the truck. You may need to play with the adjustable straps to help you get a good fit this way, and you may need to sort the outer vest in a larger size so that it fits over the inner vest. But, feel free to wear two different vests if it will help your dog stay comfortable and stay safe. Things to look for when choosing a hunting vest hunting vests vary widely in terms of durability, effectiveness and comfort - even within a certain style category. To make sure you get the best vest for your dog, try selecting a vest that meets the following criteria: Adjustable straps No matter which style hunting vest you choose for your dog, you should select one that fits safely. This will help prevent abrasions and provide a good fit. Some vests allow you to adjust the length of the straps through plastic sliders, while others use Velcro straps to provide flexibility. Any style will work, just choose the one that suits your puppy. Durability durability durable materials is imperative when picking up a hunting vest - low quality vests simply don't cling to the rigours of fieldwork. Normally, you'll want to look for materials like canvas, wetsuit or thick nylon, and avoid thin, weak materials, which are sure to rip easily. Reflective cropped Unless you're looking for a camouflaged vest to help keep your cap hidden from passing birds, you'll want to select a model that's brightly colored and comes with Reflective. This will help increase your dog's visibility even more when hunting in low light conditions, and will also make your puppy easier to see during evening walks in suburbs. Strap or neck access you don't want to be forced to remove your dog's vest whenever you need to fasten your neck. Fortunately, some of the The best hunting vests make it easy to access your dog's neck or harness while wearing it.
