English Simple's latest journal review to help improved levels of English classes and students view all major eras. The past is the most common way to talk about past events or countries that have ended. It is often used for previous pastimes (e.g. yesterday, two years ago). Please explain past events or states! A past event can be one of the things that happened in the past, or a recurring thing. I stopped crossing the zebra. We continued with the test. We played tennis every day in August. The state is a situation without action. We stayed at my grandparents' house last summer. How do you make the past easy? Common historical simple forms are formed by inserting the verb into an infinitive. start - started to - killed/jump - jumped Yes, but there are some spelling rules. When the verb ends -d. agree - agreed, as - liked to escape - escaped When the verb ends in vowel and consonant, the consonant usually doubled before -ed. stop - the plan - planned When the verb ends with consonant and -y, then take off y and add -ied. Try - try out - through but when the word ends with vowel and -y, you add -ed. Play - played to enjoy - enjoyed OK, not quite as easy! But the simple form of the past doesn't change at all for me, you, him, her, us and them, do you? No, the form doesn't change. See, it's easy! What about the pronunciation-ed-ed ending? There are three types of pronunciation: /d/, /t/ and /əd/. See the table below. /d/ /t/ /d/ arrived asked that the d.a.'s not able to pass the daaastatud decided that the agreed stop started in Aaagh! How do I know how to pronounce everyone? Good question. Well, really all you need to know is that /d/ is easier to say after arrival, and /t/ is easier to say after asking. /d/ infinitive ends with /d/ or /t/ sound already so you need to add an extra syllable of these verbs. Okay, that makes sense, but how do you form questions and negatives? What verb does (do earlier) + infinitive. Did you get along? You didn't fail, did you? Yes, I did. / No, I didn't do it. yes, thanks, I got it now! Good. But you also need to learn irregular past simple forms. You're saying there are verbs that don't end in the past? Select the correct verbs from the list and fill in the blanks to fill the sentences. Then number the pictures. In this rewarding pronunciation game, students pronounce and write a simple form of past regular verbs. Share students into pairs (A and B) and provide each student with a corresponding worksheet. Student A begins by looking at the first present as a simple regular verb on your worksheet and deciding which -ed sound verb is in its earlier simple form (i.e., /t/, /d/, or /d/). The student then says the past in a simple regular verb by announcing the -I'm fine. Student B tells his partner if they are right or wrong. If student A is correct, he'll get the point. Student A then spells the verb past with a simple extra point, paying close attention to regular verbs ending e and y as well as verbs ending with one vowel and one consonant. Student B writes student A score next to the answer in their worksheet. Then it is Student B's turn to pronounce and spell the last simple form in the first regular verb in your worksheet. This process will continue until all verbs are complete. At the end of the game, the highest-scoring student wins. When all is finished, review the pronunciation with the class. Here's a free previously simple regular verbs worksheet that helps students practice -ed sounds. Give each student a copy of the journal. Students start the conversation by finishing the conversation with the usual verbs from the worksheet box in the past. Then, in pairs, pair the students. The pair then read the conversation together. Students then look at related -ed sounds in the past with simple regular verbs. Students follow the rules and put simple ordinary verbs of the past from conversation into the correct category according to their pronunciation. The pair then read the conversation again using correct pronunciation -ed sounds. In this fun past with simple regular verbs action, students play a game where they decide what -ed sounds past simple regular verbs are and try to pronounce them correctly. Group the students into groups of three. Two students play the game and one student judges the players' answers. Give two players a copy of the board 1 and the refereeing student 1 answers. The goal of the game is to get four squares in a row, either vertically, horizontally or diagonally, while trying to stop another player from getting four in a row. The first player starts by selecting a single sentence square. The player looks at the underlined past a simple regular verb in the sentence and decides what -ed sound it is, ie /t/ /d/ // The player then reads the sentence, proclaiming the verb appropriately. A student acting as a judge listens to the pronunciation of a simple ordinary verb of the past and checks the answer on his card. If the pronunciation is correct, the player writes his name on the field. Then it is another player's turn to select a square and read the sentence. If the player pronounces the verb wrong, the game goes to another student. The first player to get four consecutive wins a game. If someone can't do that, the player with most squares wins. Then give each group a copy of the board 2, and the students will change roles, giving the student who acted as a judge the opportunity to play. This printable -ed pronunciation worksheet helps students and practice the pronunciation of 12 common verbs. Give each student a copy of the journal. Students start by typing verbs under matching images of their last in simple form. Students then sort verbs into the correct column according to their pronunciation. Next, students complete simple sentences with their teachings. Once the answers are verified, students practice reading sentences using the correct pronunciation. Finally, students match the last simple regular verbs that have the same-ed pronunciation. In this free past of simple regular verbs action, students complete interesting facts about the past in the form of regular verbs in word search and play a true or false game using facts. Share students into two groups (A and B) and provide each student with a corresponding worksheet. Students begin to find the last form of ten regular verbs in word search. Once students have found all ten verbs, they complete the true and false facts in the worksheet with the correct verb in their earlier simple form. Then check the responses for each group and review the voice of each verb. Next up, the couple with someone else's group. Students then take it in turns to read interesting facts in the worksheet to their partner, paying close attention to pronunciation -ed sounds. Their partner then tries to guess if every circumstance is true or false. For every proper guess, students score points. The student with the most points at the end of the game wins. Wins.
