

☐

I'm not robot

reCAPTCHA

Continue

José dinis aveiro death

Explore how the world of celebrities connects. Click here to Start FameChaining José Dinis AveiroEarly Life &amp; FatherhoodDeath José Dinis Aveiro is a Portuguese municipal gardener. He is better known as the father of world-renowned footballer Cristiano Ronaldo. While José Dinis Aveiro did not live long enough to see his fruit kid reach an extraordinary performance in the football world, he introduced Ronaldo to the game. Since he works as a part-time equipment manager (kit guy) for one of the local Portuguese football clubs called 'Andorinha Sport Club,' Dinis Aveiro will bring his son to watch the game. Jose Dinis Aveiro suffered from alcoholism and died at the age of 51 due to liver-related conditions. His father's departure not only made Cristiano Ronaldo more determined than ever to achieve his goals, but he was also determined not to drink alcohol for the rest of his life. Credit Image Credit Image On The Recommended List: Recommended List: It's Cristiano Ronaldo's biggest regret. The Juventus star, now 34, has a stellar career that allows fans and pundits to call it the greatest of all time. Cristiano Ronaldo's father José Dinis Aveiro did not see the epic of his son riseCredit: Collect After signing for Manchester United as a valuable teenager, he went to a superstardom with Real Madrid and was recognized as one of the biggest names of sport around the world. But all that success was segregated by grief when he reflected on the life of a troubled family with an accomplice father, who missed his meteoric resurgence. José Dinis Aveiro's dad died in 2005 of heartache failure, when a new Ronaldo was 20 - two years into his career at Old Trafford. And in an interview with Piers Morgan, he broke down in tears when a quiz about his father passed. I really don't know my father's 100 per cent, Ronaldo revealed on Cristiano Ronaldo Meets Piers Morgan. He's a drunk person. I've never spoken to him, like regular conversations. It was tough. To be number one and he didn't see anything, and he didn't look to receive the award, to see what I became. THE LIFE OF A SOLDIER José Dinis Aveiro was forced into military service, and fought an unpopular war to block the colony of Angola winning its independence from Portugal. It was a war that was gone, and one in he and his fellow soldiers saw the atrocity that left the dirt mental. Aveiro is a military veteran ofCredit: Instagram @katiaaveiroofficial Serving in Africa in war against Angolan soldiers leaving Aveiro a broken manCredit: Instagram @katiaaveiroofficial Alive appealed, while soldiers were left half starved when supplies arrived foul. Worse, the disease swept through the camp - many men were constructed on sore beds suffering with malaria, chills, tremors and fever, which caused them to be unable to move for weeks. The soldiers mostly lived in Angolan beer, Cuca because the water from the local river was unsafe to drink and was so warm it couldn't breathe the thirst. It all took its toll on Aveiro, who returned home to a broken man after he served his country. NEW LIFE After 13 months in Africa, where he also fought in Mozambique, Aveiro returned to Portugal he did not know. Because the country's military dictatorship is under having spent so much money on the war, it suffered a terrible economic crash. There is no job in Madeira, and Aveiro is skin - buying drinks at bars by fakes that respect the fact that he is a military vet. Friend and fellow fighter Jose Manuel Coelho told ESPN: We were abandoned. War veterans have nothing money and no work. Of course when I saw Ronaldo, I remember his dad: he had a problem and had nothing to eat, so he would turn to drinking. Aveiro struggled to find work when he returned to Madeira, and turned to alcoholCredit: Instagram @katiaaveiroofficial friends would buy him a drink. He didn't have any money. He didn't eat properly. KIT MAN Aveiro became a gardener, and later added his income by taking up the post of kit man for Andorinha, a team based in the Funchal suburb of Santo Antonio. He was tasked with updating the dressing room and had to make sure all the players had their kit washed up. He got the job because Ronaldo played for the side, but his son was tainted by his teammates because his father held a poor job. However, that makes Ronaldo more hungry to succeed, to show those who tease him he is inevitable. Aveiro is also often seen drinking in a small bar at the club as the clock passes. To supplement the income he received as an Aveiro gardener became a kit man for RonaldoCredit's teenage team: Collecting - Families griped by ALCOHOL After years of heavy-boozing and abuse, the destructive body of Aveiro liquor ultimately gave up. In September, 2005, he died of a liver failure aged just 51 in London. Ronaldo has tried everything to keep his father alive, but all the money in the world can't stop the inevitable. He was by Aveiro's side when he died, and made a declaration that will be the best footballer in the world. Ronaldo has never denied his promise, and has gone on to win the Ballon d'Or record five times. But unfortunately, his father never saw such amazing success. In 2005 Aveiro died of liver failure aged 51Credit: @cristiano Ronaldo's Instagram was destroyed his father never saw him become a greatCredit football: Instagram @cristiano Cristiano Ronaldo dotes at his wife in a candidate interview with Morgan Morgan