supports expanded content that is available for a fee. They may expand the number of possible compounds that produce the elements above and have numerous additional combinations of their own. This wiki lists those elements on separate and proprietary pages: think of dominant scientific theories as
How the earth formed, and this will begin you. Most of the planet is made up of lava that cools to form rocks, and different rocks are often caused by pressure and heat. Water is also a vital factor since it can break a variety of materials over time. If you can create some core ingredients, you can combine them intuitively to produce a variety of neat combinations in Little Alchemy 2. Click on an object you have created through the process of combining two cases, and hold YOUR MOUSE button for a moment. You will produce a toolbar that allows you to know what two cases you combine to create those specific combinations. This list will also show you some information about the composition you've discovered when using that component and will let you know the number of uncovered items you have yet to create using that component. You can also double tap an item you set up in your work space to generate duplicates from it, without having to scroll through your list. One of the first combinations to make is air with air (or earth and earth), to form pressure. Unlike the first small alchemy, air plus fire now produces smoke. To create energy, you need to combine fire and fire instead. Air plus pressure creates wind, and there are various other results you can work towards from there. You can really go when you've created Esal Soup, which is combination of earth plus ocean. To build the latter, just combine water with water, and continue to reproduce and combine the results to gradually build from a pond to the ocean. When you have an esali soup, try combining it with a volcano to produce life, and combining life with earth into animals... Just to get started. Remember to regularly check the result if you combine two items of a single item. An example occurs if you combine bricks and bricks that produce a wall. Combine walls and walls to produce a house. Combine house and house into a villages are cities. Look for similar chains elsewhere. There are over 700 combinations available, and no penalties for exploring anything that might happen to you. Some interesting combinations stem from mixing obvious components found in the world around you. Some results are fairly abstract. If all else fails, just try random combinations until you get something new and exciting. Before you know it, you'll open a variety of new paths to success. Success.
