Britax Pioneer and Britax Frontier are similar that both are forward-facing car seats that can be converted into high-back amplifiers. So, if you're looking for something you can use for your toddler until it gets a little taller, these are viable options. So what's the difference between Britax Pioneer vs Frontier? Continue reading below to learn more about: – The design and available color options in each model - The size and weight of each model - The distinctive features of each model - The safety of each model - Britax Pioneer vs Frontier warranty - Which car seat is generally most recommended Design and Color Options At First Glance , Britax Pioneer and Britax Frontier may seem to be very similar to each other. Each has a beautifully padded seat with a thick, protective headrest and wings to protect side effects. In addition, each also has a pair of arm brackets and two cup holders. See also: Lawyer Britax vs. Avenue. However, these two models come in different color options. There are many options here. Britax Pioneer is available in eight different color options, while Britax Frontier is available in nine different color options. Sure, you'll be able to find one that best suits your child and the inside of your car. Britax Pioneer has eight color options. They include Domino (black and dark gray), Asthon (black and light gray), Summit (mostly light gray with some dark parts), Static (black with a pattern in the center), Silver Cloud (also black with a pattern in the center), Beckham (dark gray and light gray), Oasis (blue and light blue), and Confetti (black and purple). Britax Frontier has nine color options. They are bubbles (black with a bubble pattern), cool flow (black with a mesh surface), vibe (black and gray), Trek (black and white), Cowmooflage (black and white with a pattern), Tuxedo (black and white with parallel lines), vector (black and a colorful design), Baxter (black with red lines and an artistic design), and Broadway (black and purple with a design). One thing to keep in mind when considering either Britax Pioneer or Britax Frontier is that they are not all-in-one car seats. You can't use them backwards, so they're not suitable for newborn babies and infants! These car seats are only suitable for young children who no longer sit in rear-facing car seats. That said, Britax Pioneer and Britax Frontier can last for several years because turn into high-back amplifiers as soon as your child gets taller and heavier. Size and weight The next thing to consider when choosing between Britax Pioneer vs Frontier is dimensions. They're basically the same width, height and depth. The thing is, they weigh differently. Each of these two models has a total width of 19 inches. This width already includes the two cup holders. However, the base is only 15 inches. In addition, the depth of each model is about 21 inches. The height of each model is about 28 inches. Given that Britax Pioneer and Britax Frontier are forward-facing car seats that are convertible into high-back amplifiers, it's no surprise that they're a little tall. In general, if we compare Britax Pioneer and Britax Frontier with the other models on the market, we can say that it is not the thinnest, but it is also not the largest. It may be difficult to use three of these car seats in one row at once, but using two at the same time is still possible. A notable difference between Britax Pioneer and Britax Frontier is their weights. Britax Pioneer is a little lighter at 21 lbs. while Britax Frontier will require some extra effort to lift with the weight of 25 lbs. The difference is not dramatic, but the score still goes to Britax Pioneer as it is lighter than Britax Frontier. Britax Pioneer and Britax Frontier are rather heavy. These models are definitely not recommended for travel. However, if you are just going to install the unit inside your car without moving it further, choosing a heavy car seat is really a great idea. The extra weight often comes from the stronger, beefier steel frame. The extra weight will also help to promote the stability of the car seat. Installation and customization The biggest difference between Britax Pioneer vs Frontier is for the installation system. If you're wondering why Britax Pioneer is sold at a more affordable price point than Britax Frontier, this is because Britax Pioneer uses only a standard installation system, while Britax Frontier comes with an optimized proprietary company installation system. Britax Pioneer works with LATCH links. However, you don't have to worry if your vehicle doesn't have the LATCH links. It can also work with the seat belt. It has a V-shaped tether that reduces forward movement and ensures seat safety. While the installation system is generally easy to use, you still need to make sure that the connectors are tightened properly so that the car seat will not move around. But Britax Pioneer already comes with a fast strap system. No, you don't have to do anything here again. One of the biggest problems of using a car seat is the difficult, complicated, time-consuming re-threads process. Britax Pioneer can already save you from the problem with the fast belt adjustment system. It has 9 eligible strap positions to provide the most comfortable and safe fit for your child. Britax comes with the company's patented ClickTight installation system. It's really awesome! The ClickTight installation system works with your car's seat belt. It's just about bending the seat belt. It's very fast and easy. In addition, it keeps the car seat in place of the Well. The car seat isn't moving. Alternatively, the Britax Frontier can also be installed on your car's standard car seat locks. But this is a little less easy and simple. And just like his brother here we discussed earlier, Britax Frontier comes with a fast strap system that requires no re-threading ever. That's very convenient. You can easily adjust the position of the beam to suit your child's growing physicality. This model also has 9 eligible strap positions to give the most comfortable and safe fit for your child. Safety Both Britax Pioneer and Britax Frontier come with similar security features. Each has an extremely durable steel frame, an impact-absorbing base, and two layers of side impact protection. The deep energy-absorbing shell and foam-lined headrest and lining work together to ensure your child's safety in the event of a collision. Wings also help protect your child from debris particles. Britax Pioneer is suitable for a child between 25 – 70 pounds, when used in strap mode facing forward. Meanwhile, it is suitable for a child between 40 - 110 pounds when used in high-back booster mode. This model is generally suitable for most children who are not very older. Britax Frontier is slightly tougher and more durable. It is suitable for children with heavier heights. In strap mode facing forward, it can be used for a child between 25 - 90 pounds. In high back amplification mode, it can be used for a child between 40 - 120 pounds. This model is most recommended if your child has a great physicality, or if you want to make sure that your child does not overtake their car seat too quickly. Maintenance When using a car seat, there is always a huge chance that you will need to deal with leaks or leaks of various kinds. So it is important to have a car seat cover that is easy to clean. Both Britax Pioneer vs Frontier have removable covers. So, if your car seat gets dirty, you can just remove the cover to wash it. Unfortunately, none of them have a washer-washed cover. You must manually wash the covers of these car seats by hand, as the use of a washing machine can damage the covers. That's pretty awkward. In addition, washing the hands of the car seat cover and drying the air will take some time, leaving you therefore without access to the car seat for some time. Warranty Both models here come with a similar warranty. After all, they come from the same company, so this is to be expected. Each model is supported by a 1 year limited warranty covering all defects in materials and construction. Unfortunately, the warranty period isn't really long, so you need to make sure the product is truly good without any defect before the warranty period ends.
