Imagine Flappy Bird, but instead of being a mindless bird that has nothing else to do in life but keep fluttering, you're a badass criminal named Barry. What you get is Jetpack Joyride, a casual game that will make you forget real life. If Alto's Adventure lets you use a snowboard, Jetpack Joyride PC is a game that's all about riding a jetpack. Mind you, that's not a vanilla-flavored game that's all about riding on a backpack propulsion system. The game is packed with unlockable content that will make gameplay more fun. Jetpack Joyride – A game jet-packed with lots of content Let's face it – 90% of the time, casual games have almost zero content apart from the money-grabbing IAPs. Fortunately, Jetpack Joyride is not one of these games. In fact, this game is one of the most completely meat casual games you'll ever encounter! With all the gadgets, vehicles, upgrades and even aesthetic things, Jetpack Joyride PC gives you lots of reasons to play over and over again. Unlimited strategies for all your runs There is a host of gadgets waiting for you. Because you can equip up to three at a time, you formulate your unique strategy to make your scores higher or increase the coins you get. You want Barry to bounce into a ball when he's knocked out? Sure! Rest the insta-ball and Barry doesn't go splat anymore. You want Barry to slide into a block of ice after the ball stops bouncing? Add in the freeze-o-matic and you're ready to go. Both gadgets will increase your score because they will let you increase the distance you travel once Barry is struck. In addition to these gadgets, you can also use gadgets that increase your survival, such as the Missile Jammer and the Air Barry's. These two gadgets help you navigate the game easily. We won't spoil how they'll help, but the name of the Missile Jammer already gives it away. If you're not trying to break your high score, you choose the profit generating gadgets instead. For example, you can equip the free token gadget for an extra token spin (a change from getting coins). Combine it with the Lucky Last gadget and your spins will be crazy luck! While you're at it, you can always use gemology to turn some of the coins into valuable gems, increasing their value. Combine all these gadgets with a magnetized vehicle and you can unlock all the stuff of the game in no time. Speaking of vehicles... A plethora of vehicles with their own control schedules Most other games will bombard you with boring power-ups. On the other hand, Jetpack Joyride PC offers power-ups in the form of vehicles! All the breathtaking vehicles you encounter have their own mechanics. Hence, you have to master them all separately if you want to compete in the leaderboards! with unique mechanics come unique cons and cons, cons, You will probably end up with a favorite vehicle. The Profit Bird for example is mechanically similar to the controls of Flappy Bird, but it's worth bearing in note that the Profit Bird existed away before Flappy Bird does. If you end up driving the Profit Bird, all you have to do is to click to flap! Unfortunately for you, the field you'll navigate in Jetpack Joyride is filled with zappers, rockets and beams instead of measly green Mario-like pipes. The Teleporter has an indicator that moves up and down sporadically. As soon as you click, you will be teleported wherever the indicator is. Hence, the Teleporter is great for dodging complex obstacles, but the lack of control over the indicator means you're sometimes caught in still sticky situations. If you have lightning-fast reflexes and you think you're teleporting at the exact moment, then the Teleporter is for you. We won't spoil the rest of the vehicles, but rest assured that all these vehicles are interesting. They may have different mechanics, but since they will all protect Barry from once KO'ed, it's safe to say that these vehicles are in balance. Competitive leaderboards There may not be such a thing as Jetpack Joyride online, but there are competitive leaderboards that keep the competitive spirit alive. Motion forward is automatic and all you have to do is press and hold on the screen to go up and let it go down. Coins can be collected on the go and can be used to unlock features such as skins, jetpacks, and special power-ups from the same developer's team as Fruit Ninja. Half Brick studios introduced this game back in 2011 as a side-scrolling game. In Jetpack Joyride, players try to escape from a laboratory after stealing a specialized jetpack that propels itself by firing bullets. The stealing bit is part of the first story and the game begins with a player already equipped with a jetpack. Gameplay Jetpack Joyride As an endless runner game, there are plenty of things that keep you engaged as you try to progress through the lab. The basic Jetpack Joyride mechanic is that by pressing the screen, the thruster of the jetpack enters service. When the accelerator pedal is turned off, gravity begins to pull Barry back to the lab floor. There is no control over the x-axis, our joyrider just goes faster and faster until the game is over. Do you miss some coins and want to go back? What a pity. The trick is knowing how to hop over some obstacles and when to hover in the middle of the screen by tapping the throttle button. There are only two basic obstacles: electric fences that form a line and red lasers that seem to record the entire screen. But will really only cover the portion of the field indicated by a thinner, warning radius. You will also have to dodge the missiles that shoot over to take out the jetpack thief. An alarm will go off and the rocket orbit indicator will mark the screen that makes it easier to dodge the missiles. At first, all this is easy to avoid. The coins scattered throughout the card are equally easy to collect. But as you progress, it becomes significantly more difficult as the speed of the game increases. You'll also get some fantastic power-ups along the way. An armored stomper to stomp anything that is only destroyed by incoming missiles.
