Several months back, Kevin Durant delivered a touching, gratitude-filled MVP speech that generated a whole buzz. Even those who don't follow professional basketball talked about the speech. For those of you who are basketball challenged, Durant is the highly regarded forward with the Oklahoma City Thunder. In May, he was named league MVP for the 2013–14 season. Given that the speech generated almost as much interest as the accomplishments that led to it, we decided to analyze it – much as we do when we criticize our clients' speeches and presentations in our workshops and coaching sessions. Here's our take: There's a lot to like about the speech. First of all, it was heartfelt. Clearly humbled by the honor he received, Durant struggled to fight back tears as he spoke of the people who believed in and influenced him. (Speaking of tears, if you're watching speeches, you too might have to knock back some.) The content is king, and to some extent, Durant nailed it. He realized that he had an opportunity to focus not on himself, but on others. And that's exactly what he did. Instead of speaking in general terms, he mentioned almost 25 people by name. Many of them were in the audience, and he brought them up right away – mentioning something touching or humorous about them. For example, he told one of his teammates how much he appreciated the man's simple gesture of slipping a piece of paper into his locker – long before it was decided who the MVP would be. The message said, KD: MVP. His most moving and powerful comments were about his mother, a single parent who raised him and his brothers. He remembered memories of the family's first apartment – with not a single piece of furniture, times when his mother would go hungry so that her sons could eat, and his mother's constant encouragement, motivating him to succeed. When he told her, You're the real MVP, the audience stood and applauded. Another positive aspect of the speech was that it sounded less like a speech and more like a conversation. Durant used language in the living room – no fifty dollar words, along with some incomplete sentences. In short, it was not a very polished, formal communication written by his agent, but a plain-spoken reflection of his thoughts. Now, the problems of the speech - and some lessons for all of us: Length: It was too long - almost 26 minutes! (FYI, one of the greatest speeches ever given was Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, and it was delivered in just over two minutes.) What's more, at the roughly 15-minute mark, Durant said, I'm about done; Give me a few more minutes. Ten minutes later, he was still talking. Durant's entire speech should have been and could have been delivered in 5 minutes – ten minutes max. The audience rarely or never say, I wish the presentation had been a little longer. The more you the less they remember. Value brief. Opening: Durant's was weak. He started by saying: I'm usually good at talking, but I'm a little nervous today.
While honesty may have endeared him to some, it's usually counterproductive. When you announce that you are nervous, the audience starts to worry about you. People who cause concern do not inspire confidence. A better opening would have been one of the many emotional stories Durant had about his career, his teammates or his life. Content: Despite some solid content, the speech could have been improved. For example, we liked how Durant personified it, but when you mention some 25 people by name, that gets boring – especially when you express the same feeling for some of the individuals.
A better strategy would have been to be more selective about who you recognize, and then say something different and succinct about each person. End: The speech ended badly. At the 25-minute mark, the audience was probably tired and wondering how much longer Durant would talk. Some probably foresee powerful closing comments. No one came. Also, ending on a powerful note would have counteracted some of the tedium caused by length. (The principle of recency indicates that audiences remember what they heard last in a presentation more vividly than they heard earlier in the presentation.) Durant should have ended on an emotional note – a story, a statement or a line – something inspiring that tied into his most important message (i.e. gratitude). Crafting a powerful is a challenging task, but it's worth the effort. Avoid endings that fade or fizzle out – like Durant's did. Notes: If was hard to say if Durant used any notes. He did not approach the lectern with anyone, and it was not clear if any notes were already on the pulpit. We don't suspect that. This may explain why his speech was too long and he seemed to roam. Notes give you a roadmap that keeps you on the straight and narrow. They can help you avoid winding or repeat yourself. Practice: We see no evidence that Durant practiced his speech. No doubt he was thinking about what he wanted to say. And he may even have printed it out. But it's doubtful he practiced the delivery. Rule of thumb: Practice your presentation three times, loudly, into a recording device (preferably, video). Then play it and criticize it. This year we will pass on giving Kevin our MVP Award (Most Valuable Gifts). But there's always next year. Like basketball, public speaking is a skill – something that can be learned, practiced and improved with hard work. By Nick Schwartz | May 6, 2014 5:46 p.m. Kevin Durant received an overwhelming 119 of 125 first-place votes to beat LeBron James and win his first NBA MVP trophy this season. Durant accepted the trophy Tuesday in the former roller skating rink on used as a training facility for a few years after moving from Seattle. Durant fought back tears as he thanked each of his teammates individually, and he had a special message for his mother, Wanda Pratt. Pratt received a standing ovation from the audience after her son said she was the real MVP. The speech is absolutely worth looking all the way through, but it's long, so here are some relevant moments: 3:40 Durant individually thanks his teammates 13:05 Durant talking about his band with Russell Westbrook 18:12 Durant thanks his coach 9:00 PM Durant thanks his family and his mom Kevin Durant, Oklahoma City Thunder, NBA Wow. Wow. Thank you very much. I'm usually good at talking, but I'm a little nervous today. First of all, I want to thank God for changing my life. It let me realize what life is really about. Basketball is just a platform for me to inspire people and I realize that. I come from a small county outside Washington, D.C. called PG County.
Me, my mother, my brother – we moved so many different places when we were growing up. It felt like a box. It felt like a box. It felt like it didn't come out. My dream was to become a rec league coach. That's what I wanted to do. I wanted to stay home and help the kids out and be coaches. I love basketball so much and I love playing it. I never thought I'd make it to college, nba or stand up here today in front of you guy and be NBA MVP. It's just a surreal feeling. I had so much help. So many people believed me when I didn't believe in myself. So many people doubted me and motivated me every day to be who I am. I fell so many times and went up again. I've been through the toughest times with my family, but I'm still standing. In the game of basketball, I first play out because I love it. I love having fun. I love running up and down the court. I told Grant Hill back there - I just got done playing against him - like a second grader I wore a Pistons Grant Hill jersey. That was the first time I went into a gym. That's when I fell in love with the game. I didn't fall in love with it just because I was the one playing. I fell in love with it because I have guys like this – like these guys every day who push es to be the best that I can be. I want to point them out. Vets of this team. Fish, Nick, Perk, Thabo, Caron, Serge, Hasheem. I just want to say thank you to you, man. Y'all means so much to me iust because I could go in and have a terrible day and I can see Hasheem smiling at me at 7-3 with little pants on. It's going to change my day. Or I can see Fish, just a button-up as a mayor, as a president. Just requires so much their teammates, have played with so many good players but still respect respect He's 38 years old - nothing else to prove - I said, Fisk, would you like to come and get some pictures with me? First thing he says is yes because he always wants to learn even though he has done so much in this league, played with so many good players. He always wants to learn and that motivated me to know that there is never a point where you can stop getting better. He's the guy who made me realize that. Perk, from the minute you got here... I hated you before you came here. The moment you got here, man, you just changed my whole perception of you. Just one of the best teammates I've ever had. I just thank you very much. The late night call after tough games, you're texting me, saying I'm the MVP. It means a lot to me. Sorry. I'm going to keep going. Nick, you know, the first guy I met when I first came to Seattle as an 18-year-old. You brought me in. You believed in me from the beginning. You knew I had potential. Every day I know I can look at you and know that you respect me as a man, as a player and you will ride with me to the end. And I thank you. Thabo, when you came to the team, man, I didn't know if you spoke English or not, so I didn't know how to approach you. You were always so quiet, but I could tell you were about the team first. You came in and went to work from day one. You believed in me, too, always gave me confidence. When I have a tough stretch, you always come to me and hit me on my chest, just say let's go, and I know what that means from you. I appreciate you so much, man. Being a part of this journey with me means a lot. I thank you. Caron, even though you just got here a few months ago, we've grown so close over the last few weeks and I remember when you first came here you wrote a piece of paper in my locker... I don't know why I cry so much, man... You wrote a piece of paper in my locker and it said, KD MVP. And that was after we lost two or three straight. I don't say much in those moments, but I remember it. I'll go home and think about things like that. When you have people behind you, you can do anything. I thank you, man.
I appreciate you. Serge, my ex-neighbor. You still can't speak English, but I know what you're talking about. Our relationship where I square up with you one day in practice ready to fight you. The next day when we came back into the locker room, we hugged. We talked about how we'd get better next game. And when Russell was out, you stepped up your game for me, for the team. There were nights where you made me look a lot better than me. You clean up so many of our mistakes, and we appreciate that. From everyone on the team, we appreciate it, man, and I thank you so much for giving me when I didn't have it, to always be there when I wanted to talk to you, when I wanted to talk to you, when I wanted to talk to you, when I wanted to all, to argue with me all the time, makes me better and realizes I'm not always right. Thank you, man. I appreciate you. I can't forget my young guys. We had a group text after Game 5 and I forgot to put my young guys there and they felt some kind of way about it. Jeremy, Perry, Andre, Steve and Reggie, Grant. You make me so much better without even knowing, man, because I know I set an example to you. I know there are days when I have my bad days. I say a few words I can't say sometimes, but when I need an extra push, you're there, man. I appreciate that. I appreciate that. I appreciate it because I'm not always the best player. I don't always shoot the best in the games. But our little handshakes we do before the games, it makes me go. Andre, you're one of my favorite teammates ever and I thank you so much, man. Your spirit, just your smile. It means a lot to me. Perry, Jeremy... man, just know that you look up to me and I can help you so much. I can pull you aside when we train and as much as you think I'm making you better, you exalt my game.
Reggie, when I first met you, you didn't say two words to me. I didn't know who you were, but we clicked right away. You became one of my best friends, man. Words can't explain how much I care about you, your well-being, how you feel. Not even basketball, but off the field, and make sure you're okay.
You're such a humble person. You'll do anything for the team. You always put yourself last and I learn a lot from you. Thank you, thank you were when you first came here, but you made me realize with the screens you set in effect... You elbow me when I get down the lane. You let your presence be known, man, and you're just such a funny, spirited person. Never change who you are, man. You mean a lot to me. You inspire me, too. You've been through so much at a young age and I relate to it. I know your story. I don't talk much about it, but I know. Continue to be who you are, because you're a human being. Thanks. Grant, when we signed you in, I once again didn't know who you were. I saw how talented you were. I saw how much you wanted to learn and I wanted to be on point every day because I know how much you looked at me. I thank you for your support, just your kind heart, your spirit, everything, man. I appreciate you. Even if you've been here a few weeks, you mean so much to our team. I'm glad you're a part of it. I love all of you. (Story continued below...) I know you think I forgot About Russ. But I could talk all night about An emotional guy who's going to run through a wall for me. I don't take it for granted. There are days when I just want to tackle you and tell you to get out of it sometimes, but I know there are days when you want to do the same with me. I love you, man. I love you, Manon. Many people put unfair criticism on you as a player and I'm the first to have your back, man, even if all. Just stay the person you are. Everybody loves you here. I love you, Manon. I thank you very much, man. You're making me better. I always want to compete with your work ethic. I always want to pull up in the parking lot of the stadium, or practice facility, and if you hit me there I was always upset. I've always wanted to train you. You set the bar. You got a big piece of this. You're an MVP-caliber player. It's a blessing to play with you. Thank you all, I know we have a bigger goal in mind. We have a tough game tomorrow, but it means everything to me that you're here with me celebrating with me. Thanks. I can't put it enough. I'm sorry, i'm sorry, i'm sorry, i'm almost done. Give me a few more minutes. Thanks to the organization for working out me and believing in me from the beginning that I can be an MVP player. Mr. Bennett, just give me this opportunity. I thank you for always being there when I need you. Every time I see you under the basket for a game, I feel safe. No matter how the game goes, I look at you and I can say, if our owner is behind us, we can do everything. I thank you very much for giving me this opportunity. Sam Presti, please, sir. Your texts late at night after a good game, after a bad game. I appreciate those. From the beginning, your support means a lot to me. I thank you for putting together such a great team and doing so much for us. Our society is blessed to have you. Our franchise is blessed to have you. Thanks. Troy Weaver. Someone I've known for so long. God directed our ways to work together and it has been all and more, man. Our relationship has grown day by day and I thank you for believing me and for always being on top of me and just keeping it real with me no matter what, always supporting my family. I thank you, man. Words can't express how much you mean to me. Such a great man to your family, to this community. We appreciate you all. To all the staff, I can't name all of you. All employees who take care of us every day from Donnie Strack, Joe Sharpe, Tony (Katzenmeier), Dave Bliss, Josh Longstaff, Will (Dawkins), Wilson (Taylor), (Mark St. Yves), Dwight (Daub). I can go down the line. All of you have made me a better player. I wish I had a Sharpie so I could write all your names on here because you had a hand on this. You made me believe in myself. You made me a better a better a better player. Your words of encouragement, your love, your positivity got me through. And I thank you. Coaching staff, I know there are days when you want to watch that movie and kill me for not playing defense, for taking bad shots, getting too many techs. But you always think I can be the guy. Through the tough times, you never left my side. Always wanted to push me to new frontiers. Always work with me. Took time from your summers to come work with me. Took time from your nights to come and work with me. And that's something I really appreciate. I never want to take you for granted. I thank you so much for being a part of my life, not only on the basketball court, but giving me talk about growing as a man first and a basketball player the next. I thank you very much. Scott Brooks, you mean everything to me. I love you, Manon. You as a man. I've never met anyone like you, so selfless. You don't take the honor for nothing, even if you deserve everything. I love you and your family for always taking me in, believe me, texting me late at night when I was going crazy. Thanks. Thanks.
Beautiful fans of Oklahoma City, I can't say enough about you. All the support you give our team. The home field advantage we have is the best I've ever seen. We disappoint you sometimes, but we do our best every night to win for you. And we want to win a championship for you. This town, all they want us to be is ourselves. You love us the way we are. We are all a work in progress as men and you still love us and I thank you so much for embracing us. Last but not least my family. My brother Tony, I love you. Thanks for hitting me when I was a kid. I've always wanted to follow in your footsteps. I pray for you every night. You've taught me to feel confident in myself, believe in myself that I can do it when I didn't think I could do it. Dad, it's been an up-and-down road for all of us, but you've always been there supporting from afar, texting me Bible verses every day, saying you love me every day. It builds me up and I thank you so much. I love you, Manon. I'm just glad you're part of this trip with us. My little brother Rayvonne, you always followed my footsteps. I always want to set a good example for you. Thanks for all the support. I love you, Manon. All my friends, Cliff (Dixon), Charlie (Bell), Vernon (Dixon), Tay (Young), Randy (Williams), Ryan (Lopez). You keep me healthy every day. There are days when I come home upset from a match or practice and you just light up my day up. I thank you. You mean the world to me. I wouldn't be here without all of you. This is our trophy, too. I appreciate that. Thanks.
All the support from my whole family, all my friends, over the years I appreciate it. My grandmother couldn't be here. I know that She's going to text me as soon as I get off stage. Thank you so much for picking me up from school when I was a kid, fixing myself peanut butter and jelly sandwiches every day.
texting me after every game, saying I have to stop getting techs and love me unconditionally. And last, my mother. I don't think you were 18. Three years later, I got out. The odds were stacked against us. Single parent with two boys when you were 21 vears old. Evervone said we shouldn't be here. We went from apartment to apartment ourselves. One of the best memories I had was when we moved into our first apartment, no bed, no furniture and we just sat in the living room and just hugged each other. We thought we could do it. When something good happens to you, I don't know about you, but I tend to look back on what brought me here. You wake me up in the middle of the night in the summer, which makes me do push-ups, yelled at me from the sidelines in my games at 8 or 9 years old. We weren't supposed to be here. You made us believe. You kept us off the street. You put clothes on our backs, food on the table. When vou didn't ate, you made sure we ate. You fell asleep hungry. You sacrificed for us. You the real MVP. Last time, I just want to thank God again. You are the first and the last, alpha and omega. I thank you for saving my life. I appreciate everyone. Thanks to all the writers for voting for me. Related images +132+1350klahoma City Thunder's Kevin Durant poses for a photo with the MVP trophy during a press conference that announced Durant as the winner of the 2013-14 Kia NBA Basketball Most
