It was released in December 1986 as the first single and title track from their album of the same name. It was a number one success in the United States and Canada. [1] On the 45-disc single, My Heart Won't Wander Very Far From You is the B side. He then reveals the sheer untruth of his claims and likes the impossibility of his move to that of obtaining ocean front property in the state of Arizona. Critical reception The state of Arizona is not close enough to the Pacific Ocean or the Gulf of California for any body of water to be in sight from 1986[update]. Ben Foster of Country Universe gave the song an A rating, saying it is subtly intelligent but deceptively simple, with a strong stream of heart pain. He goes on to say that Strait's vocal interpretation is just simple enough to keep the metaphor of the song of de through as campy, keeping the tone of sadness totally intact. He had already released his first Christmas album and his first compilation of big hits before putting his eyes on his seventh studio album Ocean Front Property, which was released 31 years ago today, January 12, 1987. Having accumulated nine number one singles since Fool Hearted Memory 1982 – including ballads such as You Look So Good in Love and Let's Fall to Pieces Together alongside traditional swingers like Right or Wrong – Strait began 1987 selling a two-night stint at the Houston Astrodome in less than 24 hours. An undeniable factor in Strait's early (and continuous) trajectory was composer Dean Dillon, who with legendary composer Hank Cochran had already written Strait's unforgettable 1985 classic The Chair. But where that song was sweetly sentimental, the title cut they wrote for Ocean Front Property – with Royce Porter, Dillon's collaborator on the previous topper of Strait It Ain't Cool to Be Crazy About You – took an ironic look at a break in lyrics that insisted that an ex-lover would not be missed. This turns out, however, to be the biggest lie in a series of falsehoods, including the geographical impossibility of ocean front ownership in the state of Arizona. Although Ocean Front Property finally sit three number-one hits, including Am I Blue and one of Strait's most enduring hits, All My Ex's Live in Texas, the album would enter the record books for another distinction. Upon its release, it became the first LP to debut at Number One on the Billboard Top Country Albums chart, four years before soundscan's use of soundscan made number one debuts a common occurrence. Two weeks after its debut, the album was certified gold. Since then, it has sold over two million copies. At a 1990 live concert in Tucson, Arizona, Strait sang Ocean Front Property, looking a little younger but still sounding like the future icon and Country Music Hall of Fame it would become in 2006. One of the perennial favorites, the song has remained extremely popular since it was first released and was even heard in a recent episode of the comedy series Young Sheldon, the prequel to the Big Bang Theory set in Texas in the late 1980s. In March, the Strait is scheduled to be honored as Texan of the Year by the Texas Legislative Conference.
