Television distribution (present) ReleaseAbcAboginalABCOber 4, 1980 (1980-10-04) –October 31, 1981 (1981-10-31) Thundarr the Barbarian is an American Saturday morning animated series created by Steve Gerber and produced by Ruby-Spears Productions. [1] The series aired for two seasons on ABC from October 4, 1980 to October 31, 1981, and was re-released on NBC in 1983. [2] Plot Thundarr the Barbarian is set in the future (c. 3994) in a post-apocalyptic wasteland divided into kingdoms or territories—most of which are ruled by wizards—and whose ruins often have recognizable geographic features of the United States, such as New York City, Los Angeles, Las Vegas, Seattle, the Badlands, Mountmore, Denver, Atlanta, Boston, San Antonio, and Su Alamo , San Francisco, Washington, D.C., Cape Canaveral and the Grand Canyon. Other episodes with recognizable settings are set outside the United States, including Mexico and London, United Kingdom. Another notable feature of this future Earth is that the moon broke into two pieces. The shattered moon and ruins of ancient human civilization were caused by the passage of a runaway planet between Earth and the Moon in 1994, which, from the scenes shown in the opening sequence, caused radical changes in Earth's climate and geography. However, in the period of time in which the series is established, the Earth and moon appear to have settled into a new physical balance. Earth is reborn as New Earth, a world of savage, supercience, and sorcery far more chaotic than the Old Land (the name of the spectacle for the pre-apocalyptic world). Hero Thundarr (voiced by Robert Ridgely), a muscular warrior, whose companions include Princess Ariel, a formidable young sorceress, and Ookla the Mok, travel the world on horseback, fighting mostly for evil wizards who magic spells with reanimating technologies of the world before the catastrophe. [3] Some of these malevolent wizards enlist the of certain mutant species to fulfill their orders. Other enemies include The Brotherhood of the Night (a group of werewolves who could transform others into werewolves by their touch), the cosmic stalker of The Stars (a predatory and malevolent cosmic vampire), and several other mutants. Intelligent breeds of humanoid animals include rat-like Groundlings, crocodile-like carocs, and mutants who speak like falcons and pigs. New animals that existed include whales that fired into the fire, a giant green snake with the head of a grizzly bear, and mutated dragonflies and rabbits. Thundarr's weapon of choice, the Sword of the Sun, projects a blade-like energy beam when activated, and can be deactivated to be just a grip. The Sword of the Sun energy blade can deflect other energy attacks, as well as magic ones, can cut almost anything and can alter spells and magic effects. The Sword of the Sun is magically linked to Thundarr and as such, only he can use it; However, this link may be interrupted. [Note 1] Writer and comic book artist Jack Kirby worked on production design for the series. The main characters were designed by writer and comic book artist Alex Toth. Toth, however, was unavailable to continue working on the show, so most of the wizards and other villains and supporting characters featured in the show were designed by Kirby. He was taken to the show on the recommendation of comic book writer Steve Gerber and Mark Evanier. [4] The series was the creation of Steve Gerber. Gerber and his friend Martin Pasko were having dinner in the Westwood area one night during Gerber's time developing the series. Gerber told Pasko that he had not yet decided a name for the wookiee-like character the network insisted on being added to the series, about Gerber's objections. As the two walked through the uCLA campus gate, Pasko joked: Why not call it Oo-clah? [5] Pasko later became one of several writers also known for his work in comics, such as Roy Thomas and Gerry Conway, to contribute to the show. Awards[edit] After writing several scripts, alone and in collaboration with Gerber, Pasko became a story editor in the second season. Other writers included Buzz Dixon and Mark Jones. [6] Characters The narrator of the series was Dick Tufeld. Thundarr (voiced by Robert Ridgely) – The main protagonist of the series. He is a barbarian who was once Sabian's slave until he was freed by Princess Ariel and given the Sun Sword he uses as a weapon in his fight against evil wizards and other villains. Thundarr was known for frequently pronouncing such pronouncements as demonic!,[7] Lords of Light!,[8] and his Aaaa-HEE war cry!. [9] Thundarr, along with his friend Ookla, are largely unknown about the world and rely on Ariel's guidance, but Thundarr is respectful of acquired knowledge. Ookla the Mok (voiced by Henry Corden) – Ookla is a member of the Mok Mok a leonine humanoid with fangs and yellow eyes. In the story of Thundarr the Barbarian, Ookla and Thundarr were enslaved in the court of magician Sabian until Sabian's stepdaughter, Princess Ariel, helped them escape. Like Mok, Ookla has great strength, usually struggling to pluck a nearby woodland or piece of debris to hit his enemies. Sometimes it is shown that it uses a long arc that fires a type of paralyzing arrow. However, it is also the most likely of heroes to charge directly into an enemy attack or to be enraged by unusual annoyances or threats. The mimos dwell in their own territory, ruled by a king; they fear and hate water, preferring to face overwhelming quotas in battle rather than sning through a stream to escape. Both Thundarr and Ariel generally understand the howls that make up Ookla's speech, but Thundarr seems to know more about Mok culture than Ariel, perhaps because he and Ookla met and worked together as slaves before meeting Ariel. While Thundarr and Ariel ride horses for transport (theirs is white; theirs is brown), Ookla's corguid is another quadrupedal species called equort. Princess Ariel (voiced by Nellie Bellflower) – Ariel is a powerful sorceress. Not much was revealed about her past before she met Thundarr, except that she was the stepdaughter of an evil wizard named Sabian. She learned from the history of Earth from her library, and is therefore considered the academic of the group. [10] In the episode Battle of the Barbarians, it is revealed that Thundarr was once a slave to the evil wizard Sabian before being released by Princess Ariel. It was never revealed exactly where a princess was. His most common feats of sorcery consisted of creating light constructions such as arches and bridges, explosive spheres, and levitating weights to summon nets, shields, or bridges over chasms. [10] It could also produce powerful bursts of energy, blinding light and magically reanimated machines. When her wrists are attached, she cannot work her magic, and is vulnerable to capture. Sometimes he shows romantic feelings towards Thundarr; although he never returns them externally, it is clear that he does care a lot about her. Ariel's outfit consists of knee-high boots, wrist bracelets and an open-back cyan suit with leg bar (with yellow trim) resembling a swimsuit. Additional voices The show's voice director was Alan Dinehart. Henry Corden – In addition to Ookla the Mok, Corden voiced: Caroc Leader, Gemini, Vortak, Skullus, Captain Willows (in Island of the Body Snatchers), Mutant Deputy #2 (in Trial by Terror) Michael Ansara – Vashtarr Marlene Aragon – Maya Liz Aubrey – Valorie Storm Michael Bell – Yondo Alan Dinehart Al Fann. Luke – Zevon, Kublai Chuck McCann – Artemus, Mutant Deputy #1 (en Trial by Terror) Nancy McKeon – Tye Julie McWhirter – Stryia Stryia Menken Alan Oppenheimer – Mindok, Morag Avery Schreiber – Octagon Hal Smith – Simius Joan Van Ark – Cinda, Queen Diona Janet Waldo – Cerci William Woodson – Crom Production The half-hour episodes were produced by Ruby-Spears Productions, an animation house formed by former Hanna-Barbera screenwriters Joe Ruby and Ken Spears.[11] from October 1980 to September 1982 on ABC. Despite decent ratings, the show was canceled, as Paramount wanted to make room on the programming program for Laverne & Shirley in the Army. [13] Reruns of Thundarr appeared on NBC's Saturday lineup in 1983. Episodes Season 1 (1980) All episodes of Season 1 were directed by Rudy Larriva and produced by Jerry Eisenberg.
