English (English) How to say color in sign language? How to pronounce the color? Have you ever wondered why poetic writing has this extra charm? The answer is simple: poetic writing includes rhymes. But what are rhyming words and how can you use them with different colors to paint a bright image? In this article we take a look at how you can use rhyming words in your writing and bring out the poet in you. Rhyming words, in essence, are two or more words that have similar end sounds that create a pattern that is easily recognizable and memorable. Rhyme words are most often consciously used to induce an effect intended in the purposes of lines of poems or songs. The word rhyme is sometimes used as an abbreviated term for a small poem, such as a verse or nursery rhyme. When do we use words of colored rhymes? The words of colored rhyme lend themselves well to rhymes. Not only do they allow the reader or listener to better memorize the content, but they also paint a vivid picture of the subject at hand. The function of rhyme words The word rhyme is derived from the old Latin, which means rhythm. Its use is intended to create a repetitive pattern that is rhythmic and pleasant to hear. It can also be used as a mnemonic device that helps with memorization. This is why songs and poems are much easier to memorize than pieces of monotonous prose. It is also used as the tail of a line, which marks its end and gives a metric structure to the poem or song. Most notable poets, such as William Shakespeare, used rhythmic verses to mark the end of a section of a poem or play. Types of rhymes There are many types of rhymes that have used over the centuries and distilling each of them is really a school task. But, for convenience, we'll mention some of the most popular. 1. Perfect Rimes This type of rhyme is categorized according to the number of syllables in the words. There are two other distinctions made within it, which are determined by the location of the stressed syllable. First of all, we have male rhymes or a single rhyme. These include words that emphasize the final syllable of words. For example, rhyme, time. Second, there is the female rhyme or the double rhyme. These are words that emphasize on the second last syllable of words. For example: delicate, sticky. 2. General Rimes There are many different varieties of general rhymes as well. These refer to various words, which are phonetically very close to each other, which means that they sound similar. The different general rhymes are classified according to the degree of their phonetic similarity. First, let's take a look at Imperfect Rhymes. Also known as quasi-rhyme, the rhyme is between a stressed syllable and a non-stressed syllable. For example, king, caring. Then we have something that is known as syllabic rhyme. If the last syllable of words sounds the same but doesn't necessarily have stressed vowels, we have syllabic rhymes. There are many nursery rhymes that use this technique. For example, pitter, patter. Not all rhymes follow a strict definition and can come out of their boxes from time to time. One of these types is semi-rhyme. These include rhymes with an additional syllable on one of the words. For example, repairing, ending. Many other general rhymes will be discussed later in conjunction with the rhymes that we will look at for different colors. 3. Eye Rhyme You can already feel a pattern with rhyming words, but the beauty of them is that there can never be a clear definition for them. This is the case with the rhyme of the eyes. These rhymes deceive the mind as they are similar in spelling, but not in sounds. They can be spelled in the same way, but are pronounced differently. Some examples include love, the dove; cough, etc. Rhymes with colors Now that you have a brief understanding of the different ways you can rhyme, let's apply them to the colors. There are some harsh words that may not have a perfect rhyme, but they have many other close companions. So let's start finding a rhyme for the different colors we have. Orange What rhymes with Orange? This is one of the hardest words to find a rhyme word for. Even rappers step back and their hat when they encounter this word, and walk very carefully so as not to make it appear forced. There is no perfect rhyme for Orange, so we have to look elsewhere to find a close mate. The only word that comes close to being called a rhyming word for Orange is Sporange. This word is an alternative form of which is a term for a part of a fern-shaped plant. But that's not all. Even door hinge can be considered a rhyme for Orange, as popularized by Eminem, if that's what's considered an identical rhyme. Example: I put my Orange/4 inch/door hinge in storage. Purple What rhymes with Purple? This is another of those harsh words for which there are virtually no rhyming words in the Oxford dictionary. Although it does not have a perfect rhyme, it has an oblique rhyme. Purple can very well be rhymed with urinal, for example. Thanks to its matching vowels, the word Urinal is a good rhyme assonance or oblique for this royal color. Example: A purple flower/ Sitting in the urinal. Money What rhymes with Silver? This word requires the description of what is considered a pararhyme. In such a rhyme, all consonants match and it is also known as half rhyme. Thus, words like delivering, chilver, and salvo rhymes well with money. Example: A large silver platter / For you, we can not deliver. Red Now that we've tackled some of the harder colors, we can take a look at rhyming words for other colors. Red, the color of love and blood, was rhymed generously with words like bleeding, death, fear, shreds, ducts, etc. There is no shortage of words that rhyme with this color.
