The president is the commander-in-chief of all armed forces of the United States. During wartime, it makes decisions on the recommendations of the Secretary of Defense and the Joint Staff, a committee of senior officials from each branch of the armed forces. 10 Unified Combat Command (UCC). UCCs include forces from the military, as well as other military branches. Four of these commands are functional: the remaining five commands are large geographic regions covering the entire globe. Each regional UCC is led by a general, led by the numbering of the field army. For example, the UCC in charge of North America, the United States North Command, is in the 5th Army. Other regional commands: Photo courtesy U.S. Department of Defense On a map of the world shows five of the six regional command commands of unified combat commands. The United States Command in Africa (USAFRICOM), established in February 2007 from the parts of USEUCOM, USCENTCOM and USPACOM, is expected to be operational in September 2008. There are several corps within each army on the ground; The corps themselves are made of divisions. Previously, the division was the building block of most military deployments. When the troops needed somewhere in the world, the army sent one or more divisions to do the job. However, the division is made of more than 10,000 soldiers (including support staff), and many situations faced by the modern army do not require many soldiers. That is why the army is in a restructuring that is due to be completed in 2009, which will increase the flexibility of deploying troops. When the restructuring is complete, the brigade will become a core unit of the army's campaign. Made up of about 3,000 soldiers, each brigade will serve a specific purpose and be fully autonomous, containing all the support and command required for the mission. The brigades will include infantry, artillery, air and sustainable brigades, as well as Stryker brigades, which will use versatile military combat vehicles. V Brigade troops are still broken down into smaller groups: battalion - up to 1,000 Troop soldiers - about 100 Platoon soldiers - up to 50 soldiers (this is the smallest unit led by a commanding officer) Section or detached - About eight soldiers fire crew - four soldiers In peace is the leadership of the army more politically than the military. It's headed by the Secretary of State, civilian position under secretary of defense. The Chief of Staff of the U.S. Army is advising the Secretary. The high-level army leadership is officers, men and women who have completed an officer's school and have been specially trained as leaders. The officers are high school students, among the officers and officers who are not charged. Officers of warrants often have more specialized roles than COs, and they afford many of the same rank privileges as COs. NCOs included soldiers who moved around the ranks because of their experience, showed ability or simply served time in the military. Most units are run by field guides. All your duties in the army are related to your mos. Your specific task is determined by your armed service's professional battery allocation (ASVAB). Based on the ASVAB assessment, you can assign 10 specific areas. You will receive your MOS Before you join the army. If you don't like assigned MOS, you can simply request another one. After entering the list, there is a different protocol to modify your MOS. Before enrolling after enrollment, recruits to the United States Army are subject to two primary and essential training programs: basic combat or BCT training, and Advanced Individual Training or AIT. During or immediately after this training, these recruits are moved to the ranks as soldiers. The army for these soldiers, the results of the tests to be carried out before arrival in their units after graduation. Before sending to the BCT, recruiters must meet certain eligibility standards. In addition to being A.S. citizens at least 18 years old -- or 17 years of parental approval -- applicants must have a high school diploma. The maximum age limit for filing is 34 years, although waivers for merit or national needs may be provided. Applicants shall also not have more than two dependents at the time of introduction. Recruits must take the battery for professional training of the armed services or ASVAB. It is often taken at some point during secondary school, but if not, it is taken among MEPs. The recruit must earn at least 31 points for additional treatment. Due to higher ASVAB results, newcomers are later eligible for specialised branches such as military intelligence. The recruit is also tested for illegal substances and alcohol. Recruiters should not have permanent disabilities that could be exacerbated by military service, such as clinical depression or diseases associated with immunodeficiency. Basic training takes place in different bases around the country. Recruits are subjected to certain tests they must pass, such as running 3 km in less than 17 minutes for men under the age of 21. In particular, the requirements for recruiters are slightly downwardly adjusted. The same two-kilometre run for applicants must be completed in just over 20 minutes. However, the purpose of basic training extends much beyond physical. New recruits learn to adapt to the rigors of military life, including self-discipline and the address of senior officers. After completing basic training with all physical tests performed, the AIT gets the soldiers into the heart of its chosen military professional specialty, or MOS. The AIT varies from branch to branch, such as various specialised training for infantry and armor. The AIT consists of additional physical training as well as extensive classroom instruction. For example, military police officers learn essential rules and law enforcement tactics, while individuals in artillery learn electronics and platforms used on the battlefield. The AIT is essential to the career of any newly-released Private, and must successfully transfer to join its assigned unit. Unit.
