Previous Next Episode 4.08 Episode 5.01 The 2013 Christmas Special, also known as The London Season, is the feature length of the Christmas special episode of Downton Abbey, which ends series four. It was first aired on 25 December 2013 on ITV in the UK. It was broadcast as Part 8 sunday, February 23, 2014 in the U.S. on most PBS stations. Production [edit | source of editing] Joining the main cast will be Shirley MacLaine, who will reprise her role as Martha Levinson and Paul Giamatti, who will play Harold Levinson. [1] Synopsis [edit | edit source] Late Summer of 1923 - Rose's coming ball is at Grantham House after she is presented at Buckingham Palace, with Korean mother Martha and brother Harold in attendance. Martha expressed her desire to see another London season before she died. [2] Lord Gillingham and Mr. Blake also attend the ball, following Mary and reporting each other. The Crawleys are embroiled in a scandal that threatens to engulf the royal family, and Robert must make great efforts to protect his family and monarchy. Edith struggles with a moral dilemma of her, while Isobel has attracted an admirer. Daisy receives an unexpected invitation, while Carson treats staff to a day at the beach. [3] Plot [edit | edit source] At the end of the summer of 1923 - The American Contingency - namely Martha and Harold Levinson - arrived earlier than expected at Grantham House, and Cora missed their arrival. Martha expressed her desire, in Robert's words, to see another London season before she died. Harold expresses I feel uncomfortable in England. He never saw the need to leave his country. Terence Sampson returns unexpectedly to the show. Following his dishonest ways before, at a party, Rose's indiscretion leads to the theft of a love letter sent by the Prince of Wales to the Prince of Wales to Freda Dudley Ward, the prince's mistress. When he learns of it, the Count mobilizes the family to recover it and prevent a scandal; he asks for the help of Bates, who uses his forging skills to get Mary into Sampson's apartment. To recover the letter, Lady Mary, Rose and Charles Blake enter Sampson's apartment, but recover nothing. Later Bates steals the letter from Terrence Sampson's coat pocket, and danger is avoided. Mrs Hughes finds a train ticket to York to London for the day Green died in the pocket of John Bates' coat, prompting her to question her innocence in Green's death; she tells Mary, and they agree to keep guiet, but later Mary has an attack of conscience and thinks she should reveal it. Only when Bates chooses Sampson's pocket as he is leaving, and takes over and again shows her loyalty to the Crawleys, she gives in and burns the ticket. The tension continues between Mary's suitors. Mary shares her time going on separate dates with each. At the ball to celebrate Rose Rose's out, Mary is scared to learn from Gillingham that Mr. Blake's egalitarian is actually in line to inherit a huge fortune from a cousin, so he is more suitable for her than she thought. The Crawleys host one in Grantham House: unexpectedly, the Prince arrives and opens the ball dancing with Rose. She becomes the darling of London society. As a reward for all their hard work, Cora asks Mr. Carson to organize a day off for staff. After initially thinking about ideas such as museum visits, Ms Hughes encourages him to think about a seaside trip. The two hold hands and rowing in the sea. Harold approaches one of Rose's friends, Madeleine Allsopp. She is told to follow him by her father, Lord Asgarth, because Harold is very rich. Once he gets to know each other better, Madeleine encourages Harold to have a better opinion of him. Despite the fact that Harold says that he generally only socializes with girls who expect nothing from him, except a diamond bracelet at the end of the relationship, she tells him that she would make a good husband, and they arrange to keep in touch by letter. Branson gets himself into a pickle when Sarah Bunting asks to be featured around Abbey and Thomas catches them hanging around the bedrooms upstairs as they overlook the gallery below. Upon arrival in London, Thomas makes the Count aware of the suspicious incident. Lord Merton shows his emotions for Isobel Crawley, and Daisy Mason is admired by Harold's valet, Ethan Slade. Martha is also admired by Lord Asgarth. Lord Asgarth is simply interested in Martha's money, and she refuses his hasty proposal, saying she has no desire to marry, but will invite him to her home and will also invite some of her wealthy friends - those who want to marry an Englishman by title. Thomas Barrow is still trying to pump Phyllis Baxter for the scandal, but she resists, aided by Joseph Molesley's support. Lady Edith gave birth, Marigold, in Switzerland and returned home, but regrets leaving her there. She ignores Ms. Rosamund's protests and decides to leave her at one of Downton Abbey's tenant farmers, Timothy Drewe. Behind the scenes [editing | editing source] Filming for the episode took place at various locations in London and the south of England. This includes Lancaster House, which was used to describe the interiors of Buckingham Palace, when Cora presents Lady Rose to the King and Queen; Goldsmith College; the picture gallery of the Founders building of the Royal Holloway College; the beach at West Wittering in Sussex; and Basildon Park in Berkshire, which was used for the interiors of the London residence, Grantham House, of the Crawley family. It was a year before Edith returned from Switzerland after giving her up for adoption. Family and staff travel to London for debutante Lady Rose to be presented to the King. Martha Levinson and her son Harold also appear and Mary meets both Anthony and Charles, who fight openly for her attention. Rose goes to a club with married girlfriend Freda Dudley-Ward, from whom Cardsharp Sampson steals a love letter from the Prince of Wales. Maria and Carol try to recover him in vain, although the escapade brings them closer. John is called to help get it. Mary is disturbed to learn from Anthony that the alleged Republican Charles is himself the heir to an aristocrat. Ms. Hughes and Mary discover that John was indeed in London on the day of Green's death. Martha draws gold-digging admirer Lord Aysgarth, but sees through him and refuses his proposal, though Harold, to his surprise, charms Aysgarth Madeleine's daughter and valet Levinson... [17] [18] Other new actors on the show are Andrew Alexander (Sir John Bullock); Bullock); Bullock); David (Duchess of Yeovil); Nigel Harman (Gillingham Green's valet); James Fox; and Kiri Te Kanawa (Dame Nellie Melba). [19] [20] [21] [22] Synopsis[edit | edit source] You have a direct choice in front of you. You have to choose either death or life. - Countess Dowager Is almost six months after the death of Matthew Crawley and Mary adjusts to her new life and tries to move on without the man she loved and raise her son, George. [23] She has two new suitors: Anthony, Lord Gillingham - who has known her since childhood but hasn't seen her since - and the aristocrat Charles Blake. [25] Tom Branson assumes a more important role in the family, becoming Robert's right-hand man. [26] He also meets a new friend in the teacher, Sarah Bunting. Tom and Mary spend more time together and their friendship continues to develop as Mary begins to get involved in the operation of the estate. There's some excitement in the nursery involving Nanny West. Edith's relationship between John and Anna Bates continues as strong as ever, but not without some ups and downs. Cora's new housekeeper Baxter has a history with Thomas Barrow, who has some kind of power over her.
