He became an overnight literary sensation, and soon such authors as Tennessee Williams called him the greatest prose writer that the South [had] produced. The Heart lone hunter in the 1930s in a small southern mill town tells an unforgettable story of moral isolation. Richard Wright was stunned by McCullers' ability to rise above the pressures of his surroundings and embrace white and black humanity in the only sweep of worry and tenderness. His is a humanity that touches all those who come to his work, either for the first time or, like so many, over and over again. Heart's lone hunter Carson McCullers is the most compassionate, long-time best. It's about five different people and their relationship with each other. There is surface structure where the chapters move back and forth, focusing on one character and then another and moving the action forward. But there's an appealing off-center feeling to it all, given this study of what it means to be a human being reflecting the human condition, without having to tie it all up in a neat little package. John Singer, who is deaf mute, is leading the story. When his friend Spiros, a fellow deaf mute, go crazy, John Singer attracts other estranged people who pour their hearts out to him, believing that he understands everything. There's Jake, who drinks hard, requires constant stimulation from his senses to feel alive and looks at the world with communist philosophy. There's Dr Copeland, a black doctor who is so keen to improve his race condition that he drove his wife and kids away because he never fits the picture as he wanted it to be. There's Mick, the adolescent girl, introverted and intuitive, who dreams of a future full of music and travel. Then there's Biff, the café owner who collects old newspapers and tries to understand what's going on around him. Everyone feels that the deaf mute has some kind of magical presence. But still, he proves to be very human, too. The city itself The story, and Ms. McCullers lives in the rhythms of the seasons and the music that the reader has there. You'd come at a young age, and the reality of racism would make me shudder with horror. Alienation is deeply frustrating. This is exemplary in a very moving scene where two men argue about how to deal with injustices. The heart is a lone hunter from Carson McCullers. Highly recommended. Just 23, when he wrote The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter, Carson McCullers captures the restless energy of adolescence and loneliness and isolation of those who choose not to fit into the world of Mick Kelly, an artistic teenager whose titles and graffiti reveal the darker side of his personality, Jake Blount, wandering socialist; Benedict Mady Copeland, the consumptive black doctor; and Biff Brannon, owner of the New York Café. Linking different groups of outsiders is ironically named John Singer, a man who can't speak (or sing). They're attracted to him, and so are lonely people who they think he listens to and understands. They never step out of themselves to discover that Singer is watching, but she doesn't understand and don't realize that she is lonely and isolated or why. Just as these four are using their singeric concept, his 10-year-old partner Spiros Antonapoulos has his own idol. While Singer's lonely friends project the character of a wise, ignorant man onto him, Singer imposes a similar personality on Antonapoulos. His life revolves around the rare visits to asylum, enough to keep Antonapoulos finally taken. As the reader is aware of Antonapoulos as a childish, greedy, and lazy man woman, so grow Singer's faith in him as gentle and wise. As a fellow mute, Antonapoulos is every Singer there, so both idealize and idolize him, in the same way that Mick, Blount, Copeland, and, to a lesser extent, Brannon idealizes and idolizes Singer.Rarely do any of the four interact, unless Blount and Dr. Copeland engage in a circular argument on how best to help the peoples victims of capitalism in Blount's case, Blacks in Dr. Copeland's. This heart of a Lonely Hunter book tells the story of the publication of his first novel, Heart A Lone Hunter, Carson McCullers, all 23, has become a literary sensation. With its deep moral isolation and compassionate glances into the inner life of its characters, the novel is considered mccullers' finest work and enduring masterpiece. At its heart is the deaf-mute John Singer, who in the 1930s becomes a confidant of different types of misfits in a Georgia mill town. They're all waiting to escape small-town life. When Singer's silent companion goes crazy, Singer moves into the Kelly house, where Mick Kelly, the book's heroine (loosely based on McCullers), finds solace in his music. With the spiritual isolation that underpins the human condition and a deft sense of southern racial tensions, McCullers spins a haunting, unforgettable story that voices the rejected, the forgotten and mishandled - and, through Mick Kelly, the search for silence, intensely personal beauty. With a collection of work including five novels, two pieces, twenty short stories, more than two dozen nonfi art pieces, a book of children's poems, a small number of poems, and an unfinished autobiography, Carson McCullers is considered one of the most prominent American writers of the twentieth century. His first novel, The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter, explores the spiritual isolation of these misfits and outcasts in a small town in the south of the US. He has other novels with similar themes and most look in the deep south. In his books, the best known is The Lone Hunter (1940), Thoughts in the Golden Eye (1941) and Wedding Member (1946). The Ballad of the Sad Café (1951) depicts loneliness and the pain of unreciprocated love. Wedding member Ben McCullers describes a young girl's feelings at her brother's wedding. The Broadway stage adaptation of the novel was successful in 1950-51 and was produced by Young Vic in London in September 2007. The original production won the New York Drama Critics' Circle Award for Best Game of the Season. Many people are largely familiar with his works with their film adaptations. Heart Is a Lonely Hunter was adapted in 1968 and stars Alan Arkin. Reflections in a Golden Eye was directed by John Huston (1967), played by Marlon Brando and Elizabeth Taylor. McCullers has suffered from a number of diseases throughout his life, including rheumatous fever and multiple strokes in his youth, as well as alcoholism. By the age of 31, his left side was completely paralyzed. He lived the last 20 years of his life in Nyack, New York, where he died at the age of 50 after a stroke. - , WikipediaAvailable FormatsIt is a book of public service in Canada and should be made available to you DRM-free.
