But few people know that Peary was united on this grueling, history-making journey by fellow explorer Matthew Henson. Henson was born just after the Civil War, a time when slavery had been abolished, but there were few opportunities for black people. Even as a child, he exhibited a yearning for adventure, and at the age of only thirteen, he embarked on a five-year journey sailing the seven seas and learning navigation, history and mathematics. Henson's greatest adventure began when he accepted an invitation from Robert Peary to join his expedition to the North Pole. The team endured storms, changing ice, wind, injuries, accidents, and unimaginable cold. On April 14, Peary, Henson and four Inuit men began the final 133-mile advance to the pole. Readers will share in the excitement and drama of this remarkable, story-making adventure as award-winning author Deborah Hopkinson pays homage to a great but under-acknowledged figure from America's past. Illustrator Stephen Alcorn's large format, stylized ink-and-watercolor illustrations capture all the action. Excerpts from Henson's expeditionary diaries, a timeline, and an epilogue place history in its historical context.
