During the Avengers set, the current rating system was created, and changed over the years. Scarcity is listed below. Contents[show] RegularEdit Common (White)Edit Only good ol' general. You will usually draw more than one common number per pack. Most Commons are worth less than a dollar on the 'net. Currently there are almost 1900 different similarities, perhaps even less Rarely (Green)Edit you will usually attract about one unusual figure per pack. These are less difficult to find on the Internet than common, so their general value is about the same. Currently there are about 1200 rarely different. Rare (Silver)Edit you will not always attract rare when you buy a package. Rare numbers are a bit hard to find, and are generally worth about a dollar, sometimes more. There are about 900 rare. Super Rare (Gold)Edit you will almost never attract a Super Rare figure in packaging, and is generally more worthy to hunt online. Super Rare are much rarer than Rares, and they are usually worth anywhere from five dollars to as much as twenty. There are about 350 super rare. Chase (Copper)Edit you will do the chase once in the blue moon, because they are only one per case. They are worth $10 dollars and above, largely depending on the value of the points. For example, #50 Hornet is worth 75 points and $65. Old System Edit Under the old system, there are six levels of scarcity, numbered 1-6. Level 1 is most common and level 6 is rarest. The level of scarcity corresponds to how many numbers WizKids make. However, these figures are an estimate. WizKids does not track mathematical statistics about the scarcity of individual figures, so the possibility of obtaining specific numbers is impossible to calculate. the more common that number is, the more often it will appear in Booster Packs. The old Booster Package contained contained contained A common number with a scarcity of 3-6, and one variable number with a scarcity of 2-6.
