Apple tv app playstation 4

Look at the PS5 media remote control. Photo The Sony Apple TV app is coming to playstation 4 and PlayStation 5, Sony revealed on Thursday. According to Sony, the Apple TV app will join Disney+, Netflix, Spotify, Twitch and YouTube as streaming services available when the PS5 is delivered on July 12. November. (Amazon Prime Video, MyCanal, Hulu, Peacock and others are also coming soon.) Referring to Apple TV, Sony's blog post states: Enjoy Apple TV+, Apple TV channels, new and popular movies, and personalized, curated recommendations in the Apple TV app. This means users can enjoy Apple Originals like Mythic Quest: Raven's Banquet, Ted Lasso and The Morning Show through Apple TV+, subscribe to premium channels, buy or rent movies and TV shows, and use previous purchases from Apple. The Apple TV app is also available on PS4. Sony won't reveal exactly when PS4 users will get access to the Apple TV app. However, it seems reasonable that it arrives on PS4 and PS5 at the same time. This probably means that PlayStation will be tied across the board in November. The Apple TV app is already available for LG and Samsung smart TVs, Amazon Fire TV devices and Roku — as well as Apple's own devices. However, its arrival on PS5 and PS4 is certainly big news for anyone using PlayStation as a media hub. To date, more than 113 million PS4 units have been sold. Of course, many of these customers have access to another device to use the Apple TV app. But a significant part doesn't. The Apple TV app is coming to consoles with the Apple TV app, allowing users to watch Apple TV+ shows and movies alongside iTunes purchases and rentals, as well as other content. Getting Apple TV isn't just PS4 and PS5 either. A recent report suggests that Apple TV is also coming to Xbox. Between them, this could help Apple get more subscriptions to its Apple TV+ service, which launched almost a year ago in November 2019. Report this ad It doesn't matter. Those shows could have been put on Netflix. There is no need to continue segmenting the streaming market when there was already a service that you could put on your shows. That's not true at all. I'm sure many of these shows, if they hadn't been released on TV+, would have either had a lower budget, poor quality, canceled before season five, or hadn't been made entirely. Netflix has so much clutter and rubbish that some of the really great shows get blurred, like OA or Santa Clarita (which was canceled too soon, among many others). Apple has spared no expense on the price tag of these shows. Just look at the cast of The Morning Show, see and For All Mankind's incredible season recreation. And that's just the release titles. Shows like Dickinson or Little America probably wouldn't have seen the light of day on other services because the box is gone (yet the two are both amazing performances). There are so many pilots that are made and then over because they don't fit into what the streaming service thinks customers want. I'm sure Ted Lasso wouldn't have become legendary if Apple hadn't given its producers freedom and confidence. Apple has deep pockets that make TV+ a success and ensure a steady stream of high-quality content, saving NO cost. Especially at this early stage, where Apple has to prove itself, the quality output is still incredible. And I expect at least 5 seasons of the flagship series (Dickinson, Servant, For All Mankind, Morning Show, See, Ted Lasso, Mythic Quest).
