Watch this 12min video or read the article below. As a TOEIC teacher, what do you think is more important: teaching TOEIC grammar or teaching TOEIC vocabulary? I'm sure you have an opinion on that. This question has been bothering me for some time especially when I was planning content for larger classes. The one-on-one TOEIC training was simple because I could pinpoint the specific weaknesses of an individual student and personalize the course for him or her. I always have results. But over the years, with these large classes, I have found myself shifting content from course to course, trying to find the perfect balance between grammatical examination and building vocabulary that would bring the desired results for at least most of the class. I asked myself: Did I focus too much on grammar games to fill a 50-hour course? Am I doing a service to students desperate to increase their score by neglecting business vocabulary? So I finally got enough of the scrutiny and my own research and listened to the advice of TOEIC experts who confirmed my assumptions and convinced me that vocabulary was vital. My findings I found that in all 200 questions on the complete two-hour exam, 76% of these questions required TOEIC vocabulary to answer the question correctly and only 24% of those questions required knowledge of grammar. So that's 152 questions about and only 48 questions that require grammar skills to correctly answer the question. Did that surprise you? Maybe not. This confirmed my suspicions because I knew that the only real grammar issues, pure grammar issues, were in parts of the V and VI reading sections. So why are so many online training courses avoiding TOEIC vocabulary? I am talking specifically about the official TOEIC training course offered by the ETS website. I did the whole course thanks to a coupon I found and studied all three modules: high beginner, intermediate and advanced. I saw, surprisingly, that half of the lessons were devoted to grammatical review, including a full review of verb tenses. So I thought ETS had to consider grammar as important as vocabulary. Thus, there must be grammatical questions in other parts of the test, not just in parts V and VI. My research started with practice tests; this book has two official TOEIC full practice tests from 2018. It's rare to find ETS approved tests. Unfortunately, it's in French. I picked up this book containing two updated practice tests from ETS. These are official tests of practice approved by the ETS. This book happens to be in French which is not a problem for me, but it's basically the only practice tests I could find that are official and up-to-date. I decided to study all 200 questions. And to determine whether I need grammatical knowledge to answer the question correctly or if I need business vocabulary. Sometimes I noticed I needed a little bit of both. So I kept the result meticulous. How to identify a grammatical question? You're probably wondering what I thought was a grammatical question. These questions would have, in four choices of answers, families of words or adjectives and adjectives and adjectives. Sometimes it would be a question of a verb tense with the same verb tense in question and in the choices of answers. Or maybe there was a choice of prepositions or verb phrases. So that's what I thought of as grammar. Where are the grammatical questions? There are two parts of TOEIC's listening section: parts I to IV and reading section parts V to VII. In 100 questions in the listening section I found only 8 questions that tested grammar and they are included in the second part. This is the section where you have to listen to a question or statement, and then choose the best answer. In the reading section, I found only 39 questions that tested grammar, and they were in sections V and VI: incomplete sentences and incomplete texts. Just like I suspected. I wanted to show you these two examples of how I decided if it was a matter of grammar or vocabulary. These two examples are from the second part: Q&A. They listen to questions. In the first example, why did you come to the office early today? answer choice A) is correct. That gives a reason because when asked why you came. I grammar. Both Q&A in the choice of answers A) are in the simple past. Thus, the same verb tense is in question and answer. The verb tense recognition is grammar. The choice of answer B) is currently simple, so it does not work and the answer to choice C) I'm sorry, but I can not we have not made a request in question. So for me it was a purely grammatical question because vocabulary would not be a problem for most of those taking the tests. In another example, I think it's half grammar and half vocabulary. For grammar: How will I know if the base game is canceled? choice of answers A) You can view on the team's website. offers a suggestion on the question, so I consider it grammar. B and C just don't answer the question. Vocabulary is a little rich in American sports: baseball game, canceled, team website, so I gave him half the grammar of half the vocabulary. Two experts agree that teaching TOEIC vocabulary is vital. The first expert is Grant Trew. He is the author of a book of tactics for TOEIC published by Oxford University Press. They did an interview to ask him what is the biggest challenge facing TOEIC test takers when preparing for a test? Vocabulary is a major issue that causes problems for low-level students at TOEIC. They just don't know enough words. Listening to reading skills and skills, all that stuff, is important, of course. But if I can't understand the keywords in question. If I can't understand the meaning, then they just don't come anywhere from the beginning. So that's certainly the biggest problem. Watch the full interview. Another expert agrees with the full comments from www.EnglishForums.com where James Karaway gives advice for teaching TOEIC to a new teacher. Our other expert is James Karaway. He is an experienced TOEIC teacher and answers a question from a new TOEIC teacher in Englishforums.com. It says eloquently. So his first word of advice is: During your preparation to listen to focus, focus, focus on actively building student vocabulary. Actively harass your students to keep TOEIC vocabulary and lexical magazines. I would say vocabulary skills, especially knowing the business context of words and phrases tested on the exam is about 50% of winning TOEIC by raising candidates score 200 points or so. 25% are specific test preparation skills, and the last 25% is what is generally called language skills or competency skills. For me, that means reviewing grammar. Here's the last word of James Karaway's advice: Vocabulary, vocabulary, vocabulary. Stop and drill, suggests, make word sheets, review, translate. Get a vocabulary that works until your students hate you. He says, You will feel as if you are betraying your honorable profession of language. However, it's TOEIC training, because he says: We just have to get the job done. I hope you are now convinced that your TOEIC training course should be 75% vocabulary and 25% grammar. I also have two tips here that I think are important. Two tips for devising a TOEIC TIP 1 course: Make sure your vocabulary games are oral. When a student knows how to say a new word, he will recognize it when he hears it. TIP 2: All your grammar games must have a TOEIC theme for students to pick up vocabulary while learning grammar. TOEIC theme list I found this list of TOEIC topics within pdf Review the manual for taking TOEIC listening and reading tests from the ETS TOEIC website. You can download the manual here. Scroll down to page 3 or read the full booklet. There is a lot of advice for both students and teachers. Every article, video, listening exercise you use in a TOEIC class should fit one or more of these topics. It's less fun, I know, sticking to a list of topics, but stepping away from this list for watching lion videos in Africa would be a waste of time. When looking for new content for teaching online, I would suggest typing in the Google Search Bar the name of the topic followed by ESL. This will require articles or videos intended for English language learners. Down here like this.
