I've used all these locations to create all the worksheets and activities on this page: Wordnik.com -- Compare definitions from many different dictionaries. See the words used on Twitter See an example of a word. Dictionary.com -- Search for words and compare definitions in different dictionaries. Ninja Words - I click on this from Wordnik.com. I really like the way it tracks every word you look up at. Merriam-Webster.com -- Good for listening to pronunciation and yet another definition. Nytimes.com -- After searching for a word, be sure to click Advanced Search. This is a great way to see which words are used in the context and how often the words are used. Google News -- You can view the words used in the context. For fun, click Archive in the left menu to see a table showing the frequency of words over the past 100 years. Google Books -- another place to see words used in context. Search for words and see the results. You can also switch to a magazine. And you can choose the period. Buy a copy of Oxford Sadrier Vocabulary Workshop G, a resource for general vocabulary research here: a book I recommended reading. They make you smarter about words: Top PowerPoints has a macro that I use to randomize words every day before I broadcast a slideshow in class. If you disable macros, PowerPoint will still work. All words come from the Sadrier Oxford Vocabulary Workshop Level F by Jerome Shostak. It has all the units and assists in reviews via flashcards and other interactive ones - a quizlet of vocabulary research tools and resources. This has a really cool feature. You can choose at any level, and you have different research options: choose any unit, no matter how many You can see all the units you need to do, and this is useful during the mid-term/finals because they are all scattered throughout the activities you choose. LINGS Card: This is a great strategy for people who like note cards. It promotes the repetition and experience of words in various modes. Level G All Stars (2015) - Period 3 and 6 Is this sounding? I know the word DEFINITION, but I have a hard time using it in my writing. Sometimes we know the definition of a word, but when it's time to use it in a sentence, we don't get it right in context. That's probably because you're not sure how you can use some of the speech or words. Here are some useful materials: How to communicate some of the words When learning vocabulary, it is important and useful to know derivatives. Knowing the various parts of the speech will help you learn derivatives. Click to display a handy graph showing the pattern at the end of the word, which will help you recognize the part of your voice. Verbs: Transitive or intransitive? Example sample sentence: I run to her when she is sad. Description: You can't say I'll run her because you can't run to someone. Sample statement: I comfort my sister when she is sad. Description: I actually do this action to someone, so I have to take an object (my sister). It doesn't make sense to say, I comfort her. An object is required. To make it transitive. If it's hard to tell the difference, check out the American Heritage Dictionary to learn. Abbreviations are tr. and intr. This is also a great site to check the definition of a word.dictionary.com is much better. Sadrier Oxford Vocab Workshop Website This is the company's home site that makes your vocabulary books. They have most level audio readings as well as games and puzzles to help you review. A great review tool! In this way, you can view the combinations of them to determine their overall definition. Pretty cool, Roots Quiz - Use this online quiz to help you get exposure to many and many roots that our language (and others) have adopted. Word Info - This is my new favorite website! You can type a word or part of a word that you don't understand. In a moment, it will give you what it means parts and quizzes to see how well you know. Hi is great! Root.
