Used pool table buying guide

This site is not available in your country When you buy a pool filter, the most important decision will be to determine the right type of filter to buy. This expert guide will help. There are several different types of pool filters to choose from. Here's an introduction to the three most common types: Cartridge Pool FiltersA cartridge filter is the most common choice for a residential pool. It will filter the particles up to 5 microns. (The smallest particle visible to the human eye is 35 microns.) If you think you need to filter even smaller particles, or if the pool will be used for public purposes and is therefore subject to strict codes, choose instead a diatomaceous earth filter or a sand filter. Cartridge Pool FilterA cartridge filter is less expensive than a DE filter, but costs a little more than a sand filter. Cartridge filters are the easiest to maintain, and cleaning them uses much less water than necessary to clean the other two types. A cartridge filter also requires less water pressure to work than a DE or sand filter does, so there is less pressure on the pump. A typical cartridge filter houses three or four filter cartridges. Cartridges are usually made of paper or polyester, which has a tight fabric to filter out all particles, but the finest contaminate. The particles are caught in cartridges; after a while, the cartridges are clogged and must be cleaned or replaced. Usually about twice a season cartridges should be removed and cleaned by simply aiming for a hose to them. If it doesn't work enough, try to soak them in a mild detergent and then rinse thoroughly. Or simply replace the cartridges. Diatomaceous Earth (DE) FiltersThree types of pool filters, diatomaceous earth pool filters capture the finest particles-as small as 3 microns. The top DE filter offers a filter area of 48 square meters. The water passes to the bottom of the filter and is pushed up through a number of grids, each of which is covered with diatomaceous soil, an extremely fine powder actually made of fossilized plankton. Although it is the most efficient pool filter, there are several reasons why it is not a popular choice for a residential pool. It is the most expensive and also requires much more maintenance than a cartridge filter. To clean the filter, you need to reverse the water flow to wash back the filter and then drain the dirty water. Unfortunately, you may need to use about 500 gallons of water to do this, and washed diatomaceous soil is a dangerous material that must be disposed of in accordance with regulations. In addition, many I think the washing back is not good enough, that the grids should be removed and cleaned individually. Sand poolSand Filter filters for PoolSand filters, also called high rate sand filters, were once the most common type. Sand Sand are larger than both cartridge and diatomaceearth earth filters because they must hold 200 or more kilograms of pool sand filter. They are the least effective type of filter, removing particles only as small as 25 microns or so. However, if you already have a sand filter, it will do a sufficient job to keep the pool clean. The tank, which can be made of metal or plastic, is pressurized. Water enters near the peak, is forcibly sprayed down through the sand and exits near the bottom. The sand catches the particles. The main drawback is the heavy maintenance program: A sand filter needs to be washed once a week or so. You have to reverse the flow of water to the sand backwash. In doing so, you will waste about 500 gallons of water.
