The Postal Service offers services and products beyond delivery. You can buy packaging, from bubble-pack envelopes to cardboard boxes. You can also buy postcards and, of course, stamps. On the USPS website, you can calculate your postage and print it on your own printer, or call to have a package retrieved. Through USPS affiliate CardStore® you can create a personal greeting card online and send it with the click of a mouse - and a quick dip in your wallet. It even offers a reminder service, so you have no excuse to forget to send cards for special occasions. Mailboxes p.o. boxes have been around for more than 200 years. These small rectangular boxes are usually located in an area of the post office that is available 24 hours a day. You can rent one for a relatively small fee that is based on the size of the box. The boxes themselves are built into an interior wall of the post office so that the locked page is available to customers and the other side is open so employees can insert mail. Ad There are several benefits to having a mailbox. It can be safer, you can often get your mail earlier in the day and it can hide the fact that your new business is really just you in your guest room at home. If you change addresses in the same city, you also don't need to change your mailing address. In fact, some small towns require residents to have post office boxes. Money orders Money orders are a safe and cheap option to send money by mail. You can buy them from any post office or any postal operator. You can buy postal money orders for up to $1,000. They can be redeemed at any post office or deposited in banks and other financial institutions. And if they are damaged, lost or stolen, they can be replaced. USPS offers national and international money orders, international money orders and an international money line service. Additional security USPS offers additional services for additional security, proof of delivery and recovery in case of loss. These services include: Certified mail, registered mail, informed delivery, signature confirmation and the ability to purchase insurance coverage up to $50,000. These services provide many delivery confirmation options, and get copies of signatures of acceptance, confirmation of shipment, and high-value tracking. USPS Evolution USPS is in harmony with the fact that as broadband Internet access increases, revenue will eventually decrease. So there are planning strategies to simplify products and services and tailor them to better meet customers' needs. The flat priority record rate boxes take the guesswork out of postage by creating one rate regardless of weight or distance. A service called CONFIRM uses barcodes to track email when it gets through the system.Information-based printed on envelopes and packages during processing, allows the Postal Service to offer more options for tracking shipments and fast service. The Intelligent Mail device is a handheld scanner that can read current barcodes and electronic signatures. Postautomatic redirection system reduces the cost of email that needs to be forwarded or returned to the sender. Sensors and detectors reduce sorting errors and determine when two pieces of email have jammed together. Sorts have up to 302 separations – three times more than the machines they replaced. These are just some of the improvements, customer strategies and operational improvements introduced by USPS. You will be able to rely on USPS delivering letters and packages at an affordable price for years to come. Remember, neither snow, nor rain nor high-speed internet ... Code FAQ. you Think of your local post office as just the source of spam, bills, and birthday cards from your mother, but actually the United States Postal Service handles much more than that: In fact, the service processes and delivers an incredible 472.1 million mail pieces every day, which is 48 percent of the world's mail volume. Of course, the USPS has had a lot of practice in delivering mail: It was founded back in 1775 as the United States Post Office - Benjamin Franklin served as the first postmaster general - making it the oldest public service in the country. Here are some more facts you should know about this national institution. Despite popular misconceptions, the USPS is completely self-funded through the sale of stamps, postal products and services, not by tax dollars. And while the Post Office is ultimately under the control of the executive branch of the United States government, it operates as an independent agency, similar to NASA and the CIA. But the USPS hasnot always been so independent: Before 1971, Congress established postal awards and appointed the postmaster general, who then served as a member of the president's cabinet. It may be a cliché, but the postman-hating dog is a real problem. In fact, nearly 6,000 postmen are bitten or attacked by dogs each year, inspiring the post office to sponsor an annual National Dog Bite Awareness Week in June. To stave off potential problems, USPS homeowners recommend securing their pets before opening the door to accept a package, refrain from taking mail directly from the postman's hands in the presence of your dog (some canines may perceive this as a threatening gesture), and remember that postmen who feel threatened by an unsecured dog may refuse to deliver mail directly to your home. If you are impatiently waiting for delivery of an important letter or an important package, or if you just like to know what to expect when you open your mailbox, you'll love usps's Informed Delivery service. More than 10,000 cities across the country are taking part in the Stamp Out Hunger Food Drive, which comes local food banks, shelters and pantries. It is easy to help: on the specified day, just leave a bag containing non-perishable foods, including canned food, peanut butter, rice, pasta, or food, next to the mailbox. Your local letter carrier will take care of the rest. Your letter carrier will collect outgoing mail, either package or envelope, only if it already has the correct postage in place. Your operator can't take mail without postage, tell you how much shipping a package will cost (unless it's in a fixed-price delivery box), or accept money to pay for postage. But if you prefer to do your mailing from home, never fear. You need a membership, but the site works Stamps.com with USPS, so you can print prepaid postage labels for letters or packages at home. However, if your shipment is Priority Email or Priority Email Express, you can print labels and arrange pickup on the USPS Click-N-Ship site, no membership required. If you fear that a record has been lost, and it's at least seven days since it was sent, you can request that the USPS perform a search for the missing missive. To do this, visit MissingMail.USPS.com. You must know the address of both the email and the recipient, the date the item was shipped, the tracking number (if applicable), and a description of both the item's packaging and content. Once the query has been submitted, you can track the progress of your search through the MissingMail website. Whether you send birthday gifts to your family, send a care package to a student or a loved one in the military, or send off something you sold online, packing the item properly will help ensure it comes without harm. Start with a solid box: The package is going to pass through many hands on the journey. The box should be large enough to fit the item completely, but not so large that the item can slide around inside the closed box. A layer of bubble wrap, packing of peanuts, tissue paper or crumpled newspaper is the best way to add extra protection, especially if you send something delicate. Seal the box of packet tape – not cellophobes – and show both the recipient's address and your own return address prominently on the largest side of the package. Do not use gift wrapping on your shipping box; It won't survive the trip. It's okay to send a gift-packed box packed inside a regular shipping box. Related: 8 Clutter-Cutting Strategies for Managing Mail Believe It or Not, when the Post Office first began handling packages back in 1913, several frugal parents took advantage of the low cost and lax regulations to send their children to relatives, instead of paying for more expensive transportation methods. Between 1913 and 1915, when the practice was banned, several children, including an infant, were provided by the post office, apparently no for the journey. Today, along with children, there are several items you are not allowed to post, including any explosive, ammunition, airbags, gasoline and marijuana, even if you send from or to a state where marijuana is legal. You are also not allowed to send alcohol without special permission. Other items requiring special permits, methods or disclosures include cigarettes, cremated residues, hand sanitizer, prescription medications, perishable food, nail polish and glue. And even if you can't send out dogs, cats or other mammals, you can send live non-woven reptiles, frogs, birds and – believe it or not – bees, even if there are additional handling fees and packaging requirements for these shipments. While the current postmaster general, Megan Brennan, is the 74th person to be elected to the U.S. Army. Brennan started her career in the Postal Service as a letter carrier back in 1986, working her way through the ranks over the decades until she finally took over the top spot in 2015. While the position pays a fraction of what a similar job would pay in the private sector, it's still pretty impressive: Brennan's 2019 salary was around $288,000, which is higher than Vice President Mike Pence's $230,700 salary. Does your handwriting look like chicken scraper? Don't worry: While the destination URL of most emails is read by machines, letters and packages of truly illegible or incomplete addresses are sent to the U.S. Postal Service Remote Encoding Center in Salt Lake City. Here, a team of 1,000 postal workers suggests the hardest to read scrawl, processing an average of 5 million pieces per day. While bad handwriting is the most common reason email ends up here, the facility is also about incomplete mailing addresses, including thousands of letters addressed only to Santa every December. These letters are forwarded to the post office in the North Pole, Alaska, the mail mark, and then returned to the sender whenever possible. Although the main function of your local post office is to receive, process and deliver letters and parcels to homes and businesses within its service area, it is not where the agency's responsibilities end. At many post offices, you can apply for an American passport — some even take the required photo. You can also buy mail supplies, greeting cards, boxes and stamp collection supplies. In some places, local small businesses even help design advertising brochures and get an address list of potential customers, and then deliver the flyers along with regular mail.
