When we first saw Juliet Cupulet we meet a lad Elizabethan, almost fourteen years old, from a wealthy family. Her behaviour is what we would expect from a well brought-up, protected, girl without any experience of life and dependent on their ex around her. He is innocent, modest, and behaved. somewhat reserved in the presence of adults and respect his mother's authority. Before long, though, we see another side of it - an adult side responsible for it seems inaware of the early scenes of the play. Montague Romeo's meetings and the quick events that follow to lead out the real Juliet with the kind lies dormant, but now is sparked by a powerful hormone hormone. We begin to see what lies under that outward - the type of cold for development: intelligence, a passionate nature, courage and determination, and unshakable commitment. When she appears on the balcony after waking up her sexual breathing she is full of length for Romeo. He has already started his journey of emotional independence by allowing Romeo to kiss him in very first meetings. And now on the balcony, he takes the lead. He speaks twice the number of lines as Romeo. He declares his love in one of the most profound images of selfless love; my bounty is as boundless as the sea, my love as deep, is the more I give you the more I have, for both are infinite. At the same time, he is very aware that he is too impartial, moving too quickly. It's too rash, too inadvis d, too suddenly, he said himself, but the newly awakened confidence about all doubts, and forming everything is the molten passion that Romeo was blocked. As he develops, at lightning speed, he moves to the real for being one of Shakespeare's solid women. The image, respected by the girl's inner strength now comes totally into play. She's the one who proposes the marriage, with full confidence that she's what she wants. We then saw his father challenge his father when he asks that he marry Paris - something that takes him by surprise, and that he is able to deal with, leading him to resort to violence. Juliet's father is a tough, successful man in the world and is a teenaged girl but he stands up to him in such a way that even his fiery cousin, Tibald, is afraid. When Juliet visited Friar Laurence she showed remarkable courage, firstly in her statement that she would kill herself rather than marry Paris, something she meant, and then in her willingness to accept the dangerous friar plan. Returning home became isolated when the nurse allowed her, but even then all alone, she allowed friar's crazy plan and, despite the horror in the wake of a tomb that plays heavily on her imagination, the beverage portion that will make her appear to be dead. Later, when he woke up to the grave, he didn't want to live without Romeo, he has the courage to kill himself.
