Read on to learn more about this wonderfully white dog! Read also: Best Food for German Shepherd White German Shepherd Read on to learn more about this wonderfully, it is not, but it is recognized as a separate breed. Let me explain: The recessive gene that makes this breed white has always been present in the original genetic structure of the German Shepherds. Since 1930, however, the white German Shepherd has been declared a bug and has not yet been recognized or accepted as a kind of German Shepherds. Since 1930, however, the white German Shepherd has been declared a bug and has not yet been recognized or accepted as a kind of German Shepherds.
Shepherd. Supporters of the breed began to create their own breed clubs and registers for this dog in the 1970s, and eventually, in 1999, the United Kennel Club (UKC), the second largest register of dog breeds in the US, recognized the White German Shepherd as a separate breed. 2. White German Shepherd vs.
Standard German Shepherd? The only significant difference between the White German Shepherd and the standard is color. They say what's going on and what's different: What's the same thing? Large, muscular build Upright ears Height is up to 26 inches (65 cm) weight is up to 88 lbs (40 kg) High throwing, seduction is very important Loyal, intelligent, protective and energetic What else? White or cream color Usually have a longer fur, which can be stiff to the touch Some do not have a double layer Not recognized in the norm of breed 3. What makes the White German Shepherd white? Like the Black German Shepherd, the White German Shepherd is the product of the recessive coat color gene. However, unlike the Black German Shepherd, whose true color is solid black, the recessive white gene acts as a mask, blocking the real color and pattern of the dog and causing it to appear white. 4. Can a white German Shepherd produce standard coloured offspring? The answer is YES! The only way to get 100% solid white offspring is to breed two White German Shepherd, they will throw colorful puppies. What proportion depends on whether the non-white shepherd also has a recessive white gene. If the non-white does not carry a recessive white gene, all puppies will be colored. Given that we cannot know what colors puppies be bred to a non-white German Shepherd. 5. Does the White German Shepherd have a genetic disorder? The answer is NO! In fact, the founder of the German Shepherd as a recognized breed, Max Von Stephanitz rebuked this claim himself. In his book German Shepherd in word and image, published in 1923, he states: Coloring a dog has no meaning for service. Unfortunately, however, history was unth unsa friendly to this breed, and today people still have the idea that it is genetically defective. Myth buster #1: White German Shepherd is not an albino German Shepherd is not albino German Sheph German Shepherd is not an albino. Albino is an organism that has a deficiency of pigmentation, which causes pink eyes, pale skin and colorless hair. The white German Shepherd with a colorful German Shepherd does not produce color paling Some people think that if you breed a white German Shepherd with a standard one, a white gene will cause puppies to be born a lighter color. However, this did not happen. The white gene is not a diluted gene, like the liver and blue; it is a masking gene (which means that the recessive gene masks the true color of the dog). The only way to dilute happen if the White German Shepherd has no separate health problems Recessive gene is responsible only for the color of the dog; there are absolutely no links to poor health or temperament. White German Shepherd is prone to the same health problems as the standard, the main problem is hip and elbow dysplasia. Finding a reputable breeder of the White German Shepherd Unfortunately, unlike the case with the Black German Shepherd, some breeders are in it only for money. As these dogs are relatively rare, breeders can more for a White German Shepherd puppy price for a standard German Shepherd Starts at about $300 and goes up to $900, White Shepherd German Puppies cost between $750 – 1000. It is very important to look for a responsible breeder and know how to recognize him. They should be able to provide you with full information on the puppy's This vaccinations. They should want to meet you to ask you questions about your experience as a dog owner and why you think you will Shepherds are originally from European farms where they were valued for their obedience and loyalty as a shepherd dog. Their white coats minged with sheep, making it easier for farmers to detect wolves and coyotes. White German Shepherds are direct descendants of The German Shepherd Max Von Stephanitz.

Howard, the first German Shepherd, had a direct grandfather named Greif von Sparwasser, the White German Shepherd, so that the recessive gene was always present in modern German Shepherds in all colors. These descendants of Howard were eventually brought to Canada and the United States. Official RecognitionThe white fur has been found guilty since the 1930s and is still not recognized or accepted as a kind of German Shepherd reads something like this:1930: only black and brown German Shepherds were accepted by the German Shepherd Club. This continued through World War II. White German Shepherd Shepherd Club of America formed, while the Canadian Kennel Club allowed white shepherds in their shows.1995: The American White Shepherd Association created and joined the White Shepherd Club of Canada to petition for recognition by the American Kennel Club.1998: White German Shepherds are excluded from construction events by the Canadian Kennel Club.1999: White German Shepherds are finally recognized by the United Kennel Club.What Causes White Fur? The white fur of the standard uniform black color of the coat. This gene is always present in all German Shepherds. White fur, however, does not mean that the dog is an albino. Albino animals have a lack of melanin, which allows blood vessels to show through the skin, eyes, nails and scales of the animal pink. White German Shepherds do not lack melanin, they just have lighter fur. A white German Shepherd will produce white puppies only if both parents are white Shepherds. Breeding a non-white shepherd can produce a white puppy depending on whether the other parent also carries a recessive gene. Are white German Shepherds rare? Yes, because White German Shepherd occur only if both parents carry a recessive gene. Even rarer is the White German Shepherd with a long long White German Shepherds aggressive? They have the same temperament as a typical German Shepherd, which means they only become aggressive when provoked, feel the need for protection or are mistreated. White shepherds have their packaging. They love their families and will especially protect the little children in their packaging. If they feel that someone in their packaging is seriously threatened, they are a rare color of the White German Shepherd, breeders often charge more for white puppies. A puppy with a good blood cord and health certifications could cost anywhere between $750 and $1,500. Account of puppy mill breeders who cost high prices for mistreated, unhealthy puppies. Do white German Shepherds make good animals? Yes, if they live the right lifestyle with the right family dynamics. White shepherds need active families who love the outdoors. They need a family with time dedicated to training. White German Shepherds make great family watch and play with children of all ages. Because white shepherds are large thoroughbred dogs, they need a place to move and be active. Small apartments may not be perfect. Houses with backyards are more ideal. But as long as you take this breed for daily walks, you will have enough exercise to be satisfied. Does a white coat affect hearing or other health problems? Not at all! No genetic disorders are associated with white fur. Max Von Stephanitz states in the book German Shepherd in word and image that coloring a dog has no meaning for service. What does a white German Shepherd look like? White German Shepherd sare large breed dogs with lean, muscular bodies. They have a black nose sitting at the end of a long muss.
Their eyes have the shape of almonds and a rich shade of brown. Their ears are vertical, alert and triangular. The coat of the white shepherd is either pure white or soft cream. Most often, their coat is weather-resistant double coat. The top layer of fur is simple, waterproof and swirls to the touch. The primer is short, extremely soft and acts as insulation from heat and cold. How big is a white German Shepherd? Men grow up to 65 to 90 pounds, on average. They stand between 60 and 75 pounds standing 22 to 24 inches on the shoulder. How long does a white German Shepherd live? From 10 to 14 years. In extreme cases, a white shepherd can pass away as early as the age of 7 years or at the age of 7 years or at the age of 16. Thanks to an excellent exercise routine, proper diet and regular inspections, the White German Shepherd will probably live longer. What is the temperament of the White German Shepherd? White Shepherd Temperament does not differ from the standard color of the German Shepherds are often off the beaten track and perceptive when strangers are around. They watch over the family. They are not afraid to protect young children if necessary. White shepherds are funny, fun-loving and friendly. Between naps, they are usually playing on time playing with a tennis ball, tug rope, or frisbee. It should be remembered that white shepherds (all shepherds, in fact) are very vocal. Barking can be trained with them, but they usually whine, whine, whine, whine, whine, whine talk to you. It's their form of communicating with you. How many exercises does a white
