Have you seen Life Below Zero in National Geographic? This is one seemingly unscripted show that depicts life in Alaska, with some interaction with producers and cast members, and it has shown all the good and bad of Alaska. If you do, then you're familiar with Erik Salitan, and if you don't, we're here to bring you closer to these hunters, trappers, businessmen, and now reality TV stars. Erik Salitan was born on February 9, 1984, in New York State, USA, and became famous after being selected as the lead cast member of the reality TV series Life Below Zero, in which he appeared from 2013 to 2016, when he left the show. What happened to Erik Salitan? Do you know why Erik left the show? Well, he's not happy with the producers, wants to show up on his own, without helicopters, too many cameras and other conveniences. He moved to Alaska to experience the wilderness to the fullest, however, the producers made him softer, and he was not satisfied with their approach. Since Erik left the show in 2016, he has moved on with his life in the Alaskan wilderness, and is much more focused on his business, which we'll talk about later. So, do you want to find out more about Erik, from his childhood to the latest events of his life? If so, then stay with us for a while as we'll cover everything there is to know about this popular reality TV star. From an early age, Erik displayed an adventurous spirit, exploring the surrounding area where he lived. After high school matriculation, he enrolled at Finger Lakes Community College and on graduation day, he realized that his love of adventurous life outed a simple life in the New York City area, so he packed his bags and moved to Alaska. Life in Alaska He enrolled at the University of Fairbanks, and graduated with a degree in Applied Sciences, after which he settled in Wiseman, just 100 km from the Arctic Circle, living in a tent while building a real house. His skills for survival are improving rapidly, and he now hunts and fishes daily, among many other activities. Business Ventures Once he got used to life in Alaska, and familiar with the area where he lived, Erik founded a company focused on providing travelers with guidance and clothing. The company, Bushwhack Alaska Guiding, and Outfitting, immediately welcomed their first clients, and within a short time its business began to blossom. Tourists come one by one to his camp, Eric became more popular, and he was able to expand his business to two more inns, one on the Peninsula and the other in the remote Brooks Range. His success attracted BBC, BBC producers, media companies, and officials from National Geographic visited his camps. After becoming more familiar with Erik's lifestyle and his entire business, they decided to play Erik in the lead role of their new show Life Below Zero. Life Below Zero The series premiered on May 19, 2013, and Eric remained at the center until December 2016, when he decided to leave the show. Before his official departure, Erik left on several occasions, but will always return to the show, as fans want to see him on TV. However, Erik is tired of manufacturers gouging out his business ventures, and the relative comfort given to him. Erik Salitan has a caribou in his cross. After matriculation at the age of 18, he moved to Alaska where he began living alone, and enrolled at the University of Alaska, Fairbanks, graduating in 2006 with a bachelor's degree in applied sciences. 6 Talarik Creek Lodge owner and guide Erik Salitan with #NewhalenRiver #sockeye. #FishAlaska #AlaskaFishing #Iliamna #30DaysofIliamna Posted by Fish Fish Magazine on Sunday, December 6, 2015 While there, he became interested in living in the wilderness, relying solely on himself (and his now wife Martha), and he moved from the urban part of Fairbanks to a cabin away from other residents. Career as a TV personality After moving to live in a cabin with his girlfriend Martha, Erik began learning about the right way to hunt animals and prepare their meat - he became skilled at tracking and hunting as well as setting traps in the Alaskan wilderness. She also started her own clothing business called Bushwhack Alaska Guiding and Outfitting, and worked as a local guide - she is now the owner of two inns that provide accommodation and food to people. Erik belongs to several Alaska hunting groups, such as the Northwest Sportsman Club and the Alaska Professional Hunters Association. Erik's career as a TV personality was launched in May 2013, when he was cast to appear in the reality TV series Life Below Zero, which follows the lives of several families living in the Alaskan wilderness. Erik and Martha were among the first to be chosen for the show, while the other cast members were Sue Aikens, Chip Hailstone, and Andy Bassich. Erik and Martha were part of the lead cast for seven seasons that aired from 2013 to 2016 before they quit the show - the National Geography Channel where the show aired gave no explanation as to why the two left. Why did Erik Salitan leave Life Below Zero? What's going on? After Erik failed to appear in several episodes of the TV series Life Below Zero, many people began to wonder if he would return, or if he was leaving for good from the show - Sue Aikens, another cast member of the show, answered fan questions on Facebook, explaining that Erik would be back in the episode set to air in the second half of 2016. Rick and Martha returned for the show's seventh season, and appeared in three episodes titled Under the Gun, Lost in the Wild, and renegades of the Arctic, and then disappeared again - the Renegades of the Arctic turned out to be their last episode, airing on December 27, 2016. It is rumored that Erik and Martha left to focus on raising their son Lucas, as well as running their company. Erik's love life and relationship met Martha when the two attended the same university, and they began dating when Erik was in his second year. Erik Salitan A few years passed before Erik bought the ring to propose to Martha, while it took him weeks to find the perfect moment and muster the courage to do so. He ended up tying the ring to the end of a tip-up he usually uses for fishing and waited for his wife, who is a big fan of ice fishing, to check the tip-up, but she didn't notice the ring at first which led to Erik having to tell her to look better. They married in 2010 and the two seem to be living a happy life together, living near Wiseman, 67 miles north of the Arctic Circle. They have a son named Lucas Salitan who was born in 2010, and currently attends Kayu River Elementary School. Martha was born and raised in Iliamna, Alaska, and she learned how to fish and hunt at a very early age. When Erik came up with the idea of living in the wilderness, Martha supported him. She co-owns the Blanchard Family Funeral Home and Birch Hill Cemetery, and currently operates Talarik Creek Lodge, which offers residents views of Lake Iliamna - Martha has a net worth of more than $400,000. Erik's other hobbies and interests spent a lot of time during his teenage years watching movies and TV series, and his favorite movies were Bruce Almighty and Liar Liar which both starred Jim Carrey – his favorite TV series was Breaking Bad. He enjoys listening to music all day, and is a fan of old school rock bands such as The Scorpions and Aerosmith - he also loves to read in his spare time. Erik is a big lover of pets, and claims to love all animals in general, although he often kills those who are in the wilderness, but for their fur and meat. She prefers to live in nature than in big cities surrounded by pollution and noise - one of the reasons why she chooses to move and stay in the cabin is because she loves her freedom, and is not bound by the boundaries that the city usually has. Erik's appearance and net worth are 35 years old. He has short brown hair and brown eyes, is 5ft 7ins (1.7m) tall, and weighs about 136lbs (62kgs). His net worth is more than an estimated $500,000, by the end of 2019. end of 2019.
