The name Dolton has been associated with ceramics since 1815 when John Delton bought a small pottery in Vauxhall Walk, Lambeth, England, forming a partnership with former potter Martha Jones and labour leader John Watts. The original company was named After Jones Watts and Dolton, Over time and the company's growth there were several name changes. Jones withdrew from the partnership in 1820 and became the company Dolton Watts. Beginning in 1853 after merging with John's son Henry Delton the company began to operate as Dolton & Co. Finally in 1901 after receiving a royal note from King Edward VII the company began to use the name Royal Dolton. Although the first works of the enterprise were industrial goods, by the latter half of the nineteenth century the company was developing its decorative lines and in the 1890s the first statues were introduced. In 1913 the company began assigning HN numbers to statues, starting with HN1. Initially all HN numbers were versions in sequence, however beginning in about 1940 numbers were charged in blocks. Over the decades Royal Doldton has produced more than 3,500 different sculptures in many series including Beautiful Ladies, Dickens, Shakespeare, Pictures and Prestige. The values of the individual sculptrures displayed here derive from many sources, including auction prices and distributorprice lists. There are many factors that affect the value of the statue including the scarcity, condition, and popularity of the individual theme. Although age is certainly a factor, many modern figurines bring great prices especially when they are popular and runs a limited edition.
