Just as bulky sweaters are packed in the depths of a tiny wardrobe or throwaway after a heavy-use season, activewear is also subject to its own seasonality and life cycle. Exercise clothes are functionality and style, and both, unfortunately, can expire. Keep these tips in mind to maximize the closet space allocated for your bundle of yoga pants during the next spring cleaning.1. Be critical of the training tank. They say dress for the job you want. Well, the same advice can be applied to elaborate. When you're not wearing something that makes you feel great, you're less likely to act in peak effort. How you feel when you start a workout affects how well you train that day, and a big part of how you feel has to do with how you're presented. When the shirt loses its vibrancy or shape after washing too much, it will affect the way you see yourself. Furthermore, fewer technical fabrics tend to stain or degrade with continued use (read: excessive sweating).2. Stretch pants should not be too stretchy. When previously tights begin to feel a little smaller, it is probably time for a change. Seams and belts can become loose (especially when washing instructions are not always followed up close), and styles can be outgrown. If you want to be ready to take over the world, it can help upgrade to a new style, size, or fabric that's more suited to your current obsession with exercise.3. Don't go easy on sports bras. If there is one type of equipment worth investing in, it's Bra. The advantages of a quality, high-quality sports bra and sports bra suitable for activities are numerous. While high-end brands design their pieces to last, all sports bras reach a point where they are no longer truly effective. Move past the killer combination of colors, cool design, and the fact that you had to set aside money in a month to buy and take a look at a brand new one that will offer you the support you need.4. There's no need to stock up on water bottles. Any person with a fitness obsession is likely to have more bottles of water hidden around the house. Guess how many bottles of water does that same person use during training? One. Most people have only one or two that they use regularly, and a few others who just sit unused. If you fall into this category, or if you have never invested in a quality bottle, it may be time to get rid of excess and shop for one that will last.5. Evaluate the functionality of your gym bag. At some point, everyone will get distracted by an appealing gym bag, and after putting it to use, they may find that it does not meet their needs or personal preferences. The perfect bag will be different for everyone. It's hard to find the right size and shape that allows you to pack everything you need - but also avoids emptying your bag completely on the street just to find your phone. If the one you used doesn't make your life easier, accept that there's a better option and let go of the old one. Originally written by Amy Hillock, ClassPass ClassPass
