Pilotfish is employed to create an intranet for this production business, and it is a critical requirement he has made when he takes the job: He cannot call it by name. I was told that under no circumstances do I ever call it intranet, fish says. I was asked to call it I-Web. It turns out that one of the family members who ran the place was a little technologically ignorant, in addition to being very paranoid. When the IT manager suggested that we develop an intranet, she went ballistic, making it known in a high voice that the internet would never be allowed in! Why, all that, all that subversion, all those hackers! The boss tried to explain that an intranet is not the same as the internet, but it just got her more excited. So after a few months passed, he again approached her with the idea of an exciting new technology called I-Web. This time she was 100 percent on board with it - because there was no internet. She moved to GE's NBC Universal unit 18 months ago, and just got a new gig that combines ad sales and digital media across the TV network, cable channels and movie studio. Want to stream Heroes, read the interactive novel, and then bid online for artwork from the show? Thank you Comstock for all that too. The tv economy used to be simple. Do you understand how to make money today, when I can see 30 Rock pretty much at any time? We understand it much better than before. Digital media allows us to open up new windows without the cannibalization you can expect. So yes, we can offer 30 Rock in preview, then on air, then streaming, then iTunes, then mobile, and then syndication. We've modelled. Looks like we're making more money. How do advertisers count on this new world? Some know what they want, some less so. But now all marketers do digitally, not because it's trendy, but because they have to. Purchasing groups have created devices called vision, sound, and movement [to work across media]. They expect us to zero in on targeted consumers: What do we know about them, and how do we reach them? How do viewing habits change? We've had 60 million streams [of TV shows] on NBC.com. Many of these are repeat viewers. Others are time-shifting. They also change location change with iTunes or on phones. And does it work for you? It must be. If consumers are in control, they will how they want to watch. We have to find the right solution. What's the next new one? More personal expression [of viewers], the desire to be involved in the story. Text to vote on a reality show, or see heroes and call a phone number. That things are so rudimentary. We look back one day and say: We were so cute then! All this involves great cultural change. How is NBC Universal coping? This room is frenetic and chaotic, and we are constantly trying to get out of our own way. With success, you become a little more confident. But we still need to be more focused and more disciplined. Are you still, as you once said about yourself, impatient? Yes. And I'm afraid. I constantly scan the landscape. What's the next new one? Who gets there first? This business is hypersensitive like that. You have to choose a path, stick to it, and feel good about it. Second-guesses will end up with more than wounds. A member of our web team came across what could be a useful and economical business tool. iDictate is a service that will transcribe documents submitted to them by phone or dictation device - think traditional dictation; you dial in to dictate the document — for about 1 cent a word. They also offer standard transcription services for about 2 cents per word. Most transcription services are billed per hour, so it seems like a pretty good deal - especially with processing times between 24 minutes and 24 hours. Have any FC Now readers used the service? Word forms are the different ways a word can exist in the context of a language. Many words exist as nouns, verbs, or adjectives and change when prefixes or suffixes are added. It is necessary to understand word forms to understand and communicate in a given language. Word forms change the meaning and tenseness of the rotord. For example, the words are beautify, beautiful and beautiful verb, adjective and adverbs forms of noun beauty, but they are not interchangeable when used in a sentence. Contextual clues are required when deciding which word form to use in cases of verb tense, such as jumping or jumping and learning or learning. The news wears off all games at some point. Word games, in particular, can get dry as you spell the same words over and over again. Rewordable's Card Game tries to keep things fresh, having been designed so that each round will present a new experience and challenge every time you play. If you want to help both younger and older players improve their word recognition skills, Rewordable's Card Game is an excellent choice. This game is about building longer and longer words out of more common ones. Players are given a set of cards with word fragments they must use to spell larger complete words. The idea is similar to the classic game Scrabble, but it gives younger players greater fragments to This game, originally a Kickstarter project, is ideal for players aged 7 and older. Since a wedding is a formal event, most couples include an answer card with the invitation. But do you know how a response card should be formulated or correct RSVP etiquette? Or are there other ways for guests to respond? Once upon a time, people didn't need answer cards. When they received a written invitation, they would respond to their own letter letter letter letter letter letter letter letter letter letter letter letter letter letter letter letter, and indicate whether they would be able to participate. With the invention of phone and email, it has become common to include an answer card for formal invitations and to ask people to reply by phone or email for informal invitations. The good news is that it's not a proper way to word an answer card. Instead, there are styles that are more suitable for a formal wedding and some that are best suited for an informal wedding. There are also some styles best for a bride and groom with a very tight guest list. The service of a response is requested by June 1, 20xx. M _____ accept with pleasure _____ Diminish with regret ----- M _____ Will _____ Delta Line is intended for your guest to fill out Ms., Mr. or Mrs., and write their names(s). In the first option, they just check whether they can come or not. In the second option, your guest will respond in the affirmative by simply typing their name and leaving the space between will and delta blank. If they have to decline, they won't write. Some couples prefer not to include answer cards, and as mentioned earlier, there are no hard and quick requirements to do so. A compromise for a formal wedding is to use a small, single card that says: The service of a response is requested by June 1, 2014, or We look forward to hearing from you. Most people will either write a note on their personal letter letter letter letter or use the card themselves to send back a note. A few people can call or email. Of course, these do not always have to be prim and correct. Here are some fun and casual, and humorous ways to write your response card. We can't wait to celebrate with you. Please answer by June 1, 20xxM _____ is _____ regrets ----- We have reserved two seats in your honor. M _____ is _____ dans, and celebrates _____ has/must miss the fun ----- Take the time to fill in the fields: _____! _____ are _____ people in our posse. (total number) June 2014 ----- Please reply before June 1, 2014 Name(s) _____ Can't wait! _____ Can't come! You may have guests who will fail to write in their names or who write illegibly. To fix this problem, number your guest list, and then eye-catchingly write the corresponding number on the back of each answer card. To get an accurate number of participants, you may want to include this line _____ number participating. Include an easy way for guests to respond by pre-addressing and stamping a return envelope. You may also want to include a phone number or email address. Just make sure email isn't the only way to respond. If you invite a large number of families with children, you may want to include separate lines reading: Number of delta ceremony _____ Number Attend reception _____ Here are 11 words beginning with A that may pose some difficulties for Spanish students. Learn these and you will be well on your way to improving your use of the language. a: As a normal preposition has a minimum of six uses. It usually means to, but can also be translated by other prepositions or used as a type of connection word. Sometimes, as with the personal a, it does not translate at all. No fumos a la playa. We didn't go to the beach. Llegamos en Guatemala en las 17 horas. We arrive in Guatemala at 5pm.m. Conoci a la superestrella en Buenos Aires. I met the superstar in Buenos Aires. adonde and adónde: Adonde and adónde usually means where, but only in cases where to where or a variant of it can be replaced in translation. In other words, adónde works much like a dónde wild and indicates movement to a place or in one direction. Es una pequeña playa pública adonde mis padres nos llevaban en verano. It's a small public beach (to) where my parents took us in the summer. -Qué pasa si adónde viajamos es otro planeta? What happens if where we travel (to) is another planet? al: Al is one of the few contractions of the Spaniards, combining a and el, a word for it. When al means to, its use is simple. Al followed by an infinitive, however, is a common way of explaining that something happened after the action represented by the infinitive. Paulina y yo vamos al zoo para ver los animals. Paulina and I are going to the zoo to see the animals. Me alegré al encontrar algunos de mis amigos en el centro. I was happy when I found some of my friends in the center. aparentemente: Depending on the context, aparentemente may suggest stronger than the English apparently that things may not be what they seem. Está aparentemente feliz, pero está en punto de pedirle el divorcio. She's supposedly happy, but she's on the verge of asking him for the divorce. apología: An apology is a position, as in a legal case or an argument. It is not used to express remorse. No high excuses in terrorism. There is no defense of terrorism. asistir: Although asistir can mean helping, it means much more often to attend a gathering or an event. Gracias en todos que asistieron mi concierto anoche. Thank you to everyone who attended my concert last night. El gobierno le asistió con una pensión hasta el final de sus días. The government helped him retire until the end of his days. Atender: Ends can mean participating in the sense of taking care of someone, but not in the sense of attending an event. El doctor atendió al futbolista en el hospital durante su grave enfermedad. The doctor took care of the footballer during his serious illness. aun and aún: Although aun and aún are both adverbs, the first is usually used to indicate even as in the examples below, while the latter usually indicates that an action continues and can be translated as still or yet. Aun este año no tengo nada. Even this year, I don't have anything. Ni aun yo puedo entenderlos. Not even I can understand them. He configurado mi dispositivo, pero aún no puedo usar la internet. I've set up my device, but I still can't use the Internet. Or I've set up my device, but I can't use the Internet yet. aunque: Aunque is the most common way to say even if, often it is better translated even if or even if. If the verb that follows refers to something that has already occurred or happens, it must be in the indicative mood, while a verb referring to the future or a hypothetical event must be in the conjunctival. Todo está bien aunque me tragaron los mosquito cuando me fui de camping. Everything is good even though the mosquitoes ate me up when I went camping. (Tragaron is indicative because it refers to a previous event.) Crean una pila que no hace daño aunque los niños la traguen. They develop a battery that does not cause harm even if children swallow it. (Traguen is in a subjunctive mood because the event is not yet going to happen or is theoretical.)
