Book stand holder for reading

Whether you're looking for a summer beach read or something scary to keep you up late at night, there are thousands of good books out there. From classics to tear-jerkers, we've compiled a short list of quality reads to make you laugh, cry, or want to fall in love. Many of these titles are available both in print and as an e-book, so whatever your favorite delivery method. So brew a cup of tea or pour a glass of wine, and relax with a story that takes you. Underestimating the phonies in his life, the hero-narrator, a native New Yorker named Holden Caulfield, is the quintessential 16-year-old. His story is firsthand, from leaving his Pennsylvania prep school to going underground and AWCQ, to New York for three days. Confused and frustrated, he searches for the truth and rails against the phonology of the adult world. He ends up exhausted and emotionally ill in a psychiatrist's office. After recovering from his collapse, Holden associates his experiences with the reader. Perhaps the safest thing we can say about Holden is that he was born in the world not only strongly attracted to beauty but, almost, hopelessly impaled on it. This is a series of seven books, both praised and criticized for Christian allegories, but the entire novella collection is worth reading about the rich narrative alone. Following the history of anthropomorphic animals and noble people, the Chronicles intertwine wartime England with the birth, development and death of a magical world. Fantastic creatures, heroic acts, epic battles in the war between good and evil, and unforgettable adventures come together in this world where magic meets reality, which has been captivating readers of all ages for over sixty years. The Chronicles of Narnia has transcended the fantasy genre to become part of the rule of classical literature. Paul and Alice's half-sister, Eloise, is getting married! London! There will be fancy hotels, dinners in IT restaurants and a reception at a country estate with tea lights and embroidered cloth napkins. They couldn't hate it any more. The product of Donna's first marriage to a dashing Frenchman, Eloise has spent her school years in the best private boarding schools, her winter vacation in St. John's and a post-college life offset by a fat, endless fund. You won't be able to put down the story of the vibrant, hilarious life the power of family, and the complicated ways we hate those we love most in the most bitingly funny, slyly witty and surprisingly tender novel you'll read this year. Hazel has just moved in. Park trailer of the elderly, with her father and Diane-his extremely lively sex doll-as her roommates. She's just exhausted for her marriage to Byron Gogol, CEO, and founder of Gogol Industries, having been veritably quarantined by Byron in the family compound, her every move and vital sign tracked. As a Trying to carve out a new life for herself in this uncharted territory, Byron uses the most sophisticated tools at his disposal to find her and bring her home. This wild comedy shines with warmth as Hazel is forced to take drastic steps to find a home of her own and free herself from Byron's iconic clutches once and for all. If you've recently gone through a breakup, you might enjoy reading this book, looking at solo trips across four seasons and four cities. The destinations -- Paris, Istanbul, Florence, New York -- are all pedestrian-friendly, allowing travelers to slow down and appreciate the occasional pleasures instead of hurting museums and posting photos on Instagram. Author Stephanie Rosenbloom believes that being alone as a traveler - and even in his own city - is conducive to becoming acutely aware of the sensual details of the world - patterns, textures, colors, flavors, sounds - in ways that are difficult to do in the company of others. The best beach read, especially if you liked the devil wearing Prada. Andy faces a challenge even greater than Miranda Priestly - suburbs. After leaving Miranda Priestly, she works in Hollywood as an image consultant for the stars. But recently, Emily lost some clients. He needs a great opportunity, and he needs it now. So it is that Emily, her scorned friend-cum-client Karolina, and their mutual friend Miriam, a powerful lawyer turned stay-at-home suburban mom, band together not only to navigate not only the social land mines of suburban Greenwich, but to win back the hearts of the American public. Grab your blanket and lock the doors. Two truths and a lie. The girls used to play it all the time in their cabin at Camp Nightingale. Vivian, Natalie, Alison and first camper Emma Davis. But the games ended the night Emma sleepily watched others sneak out of the cabin in the dark. As an adult, Emma finds herself sorting through lies from the past while facing mysterious threats in the present. And the closer it gets to the truth about Camp Nightingale and what really happened to these girls, the more she realizes that closure could come at a deadly price. On the day the government stipulates that women are no longer allowed more than a hundred words a day, Dr. Jean McClellan is in denial. Soon women are not allowed to hold jobs. Girls don't learn to read or write. Women don't have a voice anymore. Before, the average person spoke 16,000 words every day, but now women only have a hundred to be heard. Jean has a chance to not only her own voice but also the voices of all other women. February 1862. Meanwhile, President Lincoln's beloved 11-year-old son, Willie, is upstairs in the White House, gravely ill. Newspapers report that a grief-stricken Lincoln returns, alone, to the crypt several times to keep his boy's body. From this seed seed tree, George Saunders turns a memorable story of family love and loss that breaks free from its realistic, historical context in a supernatural realm both hilarious and terrifying. Willie Lincoln is in a strange purgatory where ghosts mingle, grumble, sing, argue and enact strange acts of repentance. Within this transitional situation-called, in Tibetan tradition, the bardo-a monumental struggle explodes over the soul of young Willie. In this completely accessible but comprehensive guide to wine, author Melissa Ross will guide you through the inside and outside of wine culture. She said in her signature comedic voice, with personal anecdotes woven between her courses, Wine. All the time it will teach you to drink confidently and make you laugh the way you do. It's Me, Margaret by Judy Blume Pity any woman who had to suffer from puberty without this book on her shelf. Margaret is the 12-year-old everywoman, waiting for her first period and literally praying for breasts. 2 of 50 A visit from the Goon Squad by Jennifer Egan To her Pulitzer Prize-winning novel, Egan weaves together vignettes of a group of New York friends struggling with this wretched goon: time. 3 of 50 Aint I a Woman by Bell Hooks The social activist contributed a key chapter to the canon of the women's experience with this book, which examines the underestimation of black women throughout history. 4 of Anne Frank's 50: The diary of a young girl by Anne Frank was lost in a concentration camp during World War II, but the diary she kept in captivity survives. It remains an animated reminder of how hope can be found anywhere - even in an attic during one of the darkest moments in human history. 5 of 50 Bad Feminist by Roxane Gay The term feminist has always been a polarizing one, but Gay examines her feelings through the lens of pop-culture figures like Sweet Valley High and Orange Is the New Black. 6 out of 50 Bean Trees from Barbara Kingsolver Kingsolver's first novel is the quirky, relatable story of a woman heading west to leave her small hometown in Kentucky, finding adventure (and an abandoned toddler) in the process. 7 of 50 Americanah of Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie Published two poetry books from the age of 21, but this is not her only medium. Adichie's powerful fiction skills are on display as it follows a couple drawn between modern life in the United States and Nigeria. 8 of 50 The Beauty Myth by Naomi Wolf If it's obvious now that the media messes with women's views of their bodies, it wasn't always. Wolf's important book and examinations of plastic surgery and eating disorders are as important today as they were in 1990. 9 of 50 The Bell Vase by Sylvia Plath The Only Novel Novel produced in her tragically short life gives the semi-autobiographical story of a girl struggling to figure out what path she should take in life. 10 of the 50 Beloved by Toni Morrison Morrison has produced a stunning list of novels about the black experience in America, and Beloved is perhaps the most laudable and the most devastating. The dark horror of the central plot is a terrifying glimpse into the psychology of slavery. 11 of the 50 Bossypants by Tina Fey Saturday Night Live's first female head writer has, over and over, summarily answered the (absurd) question of whether or not women are funny. 12 of Bridget Jones's 50 Diary by Helen Fielding Before there were Renee Zellweger films, there was Fielding's novel, which takes the form of magazine entries from the ever-single 30-year-old gal of the title. 13 of 50 A Room Owned by Virginia Woolf produced many emotionally excruciating books about women's inner lives, but this extensive essay is a great intrusion into wool canon. In it, he argues that a woman should have money and a room of her own if she is to write fiction (or fill in your passion here). 14 of the 50 The Color Purple from Alice Walker Walker's best-known work, which follows the horrific violence and oppression of many African-American women in the 1930s, won the Pulitzer Prize for fiction as well as the National Book Award, and has been adapted into a film and Broadway show. 15 of 50 Eat Pray Love by Elizabeth Gilbert While occasionally seen as a corny navel-gazer for a very privileged woman and her travels, Gilbert's book was a hit for a reason: It's a real-life fantasy about a woman who chooses to escape her life for an incredible year. 16 of 50 The Female Mystique from Betty Friedan Friedan's iconic examination of housewives and their unfulfilled inner lives is widely considered the starting point in the second wave of feminism in the early 1960s. 17 of 50 Fifty Shades of Grey by E.L. James The prose isn't exactly groundbreaking, but its literary advantages are off topic. Erotica James's fanfic trilogy became an international sensation, reminding the world once again that women can enjoy sex - and enjoy reading about it. 18 of 50 Fun Home by Alison Bechdel The Bechdel Trial has become a key judge of cultural equality - this film features a scene with two women talking about something other than men? But it's not just what the author has given to society. In 2006 her graphic memoir was later turned into a Tony Award-winning musical. 19 of 50 Gilead by Marilynne Robinson In One that President Obama has called one of his favorites, a dying man composes life lessons in a letter to his young son. What emerges is a touching examination of the role of religion and spirituality within each of us. 20 of Donna Tartt Tartt's 50 Goldfinch Worldwide it's a 773-page epic about a boy who survives a terrorist attack and grows up obsessed and long for the mother he lost in the disaster. 21 of 50 A Good Man is Hard to Find and other stories by Flannery O'Connor an essentially Southern writer who loved to capture the eccentric decay of the South. O'Connor's story collection reminded everyone that women are equally capable of depicting worlds of shocking, senseless violence. 22 of 50 The Handmaid's Tale by Margaret Atwood In a novel often invoked in the women's health debate, Atwood imagines a stuffy dystopia where women are used only for their ability to reproduce. 23 out of 50 Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone by J.K. Rowling One day you'll tell your grandchildren that you were alive when the Harry Potter books were first released, and they'll be in awe. 24 out of 50 Fear of Flying by Erica Jong A stunning, controversial look at women enjoying sex for the sake of way sex back in 1973, Jong's book was an absolute sensation. 25 of 50 The House on Mango Street by Sandra Cisneros' lyrical vignettes follow a girl named Esperanza as she struggles to leave her poor, Latino neighborhood. 26 of 50 In the Age of Butterflies by Julia Alvarez In this historical novel, Alvarez arts four sisters who grow up - and eventually fight - the Trujillo dictatorship in the Dominican Republic. 27 of 50 Interpreter of Diseases by Jhumpa Lahiri This Pulitzer Prize-winning collection of stories is about Indian and Indian-American people interacting with and fighting against their culture and the West. 28 out of 50 I Know Why The Bird Cage Sings by Maya Angelou Angelou lived a wonderful, painful, beautiful life, and chronicles the first seventeen years in this moving autobiography. 29 of 50 Little House on the Prairie by the sweet series Laura Ingalls Wilder Wilder captured the true story of her rough-and-tumble upbringing in a pioneering family on the prairie. 30 of 50 Jane Eyre by Charlotte Bronte To think that a classic of literature - a rich discussion of class, gender, religion, and love - was written by a 30-year-old woman! Wife!
