Barack Obama Becomes America's First Black President. The Guardian, 5 November 2008, The Guardian, 5 November 2008. . The Chicago Manual of Style, which is currently in its 16th edition, was created to help researchers quote their sources correctly. There are two types of reference styles in Chicago: 1) Notes and Bibliography and 2) Author Date. This guide displays the reference styles of Notes and Bibliography and is not associated with the official publisher of the style. Need help with another style? Our comprehensive MLA format guide and APA format are available for all the sources used in the paper. This list includes important publication details from the source. Bibliography should also follow this format: The citation list or bibliography must be indented. Example Quoting Different Sources in Chicago Style Generally, Chicago quotes require: Author title book / article Newspaper title / journal Publication year Publication month and date Publisher City publication Date access Page number URL or Name How to Create and Eindnotes for Chicago Style If you're wondering how to format quotes in Chicago text, Notes and Eindnotes for Chicago Style If you're wondering how to format quotes in Chicago text, Notes and Eindnotes for Chicago Style If you're wondering how to format quotes in Chicago text, Notes and Eindnotes for Chicago Style If you're wondering how to format quotes in Chicago text, Notes and Eindnotes for Chicago text, Notes and Eindnotes for Chicago Style If you're wondering how to format quotes in Chicago text, Notes and Eindnotes for Chicago text, Notes and Eindnotes for Chicago Style If you're wondering how to format quotes in Chicago text, Notes and Eindnotes for Chi endnotes acknowledge the various sources used in the work. When the source is used in a research paper, the roman numerals are placed at the end of the borrowed information as superscripts (smaller than normal lines of text and raised). That number correlates with a footnote or endnote. Footnotes found at the bottom of the Endnote page are added at the end of the chapter or project Footnotes or endnotes contain complete quotation information The number matches in the footnote or endnote is normal-sized and not raised It is up to the author's discretion to place the quote at the bottom of the page where the superscript placed (footnote) or to put all quotes together at the end of the page where the superscript is placed (footnote) or to put all quotes together at the end of the page where the superscript is placed (footnote) or to put all quotes together at the end of the page where the superscript is placed (footnote) or to put all quotes together at the end of the page where the superscript is placed (footnote) or to put all quotes together at the end of the page where the superscript is placed (footnote) or to put all quotes together at the end of the page where the superscript is placed (footnote) or to put all the quotes together at the end of the page where the superscript is placed (footnote) or to put all the work (endnote) or to put all the quotes together at the end of the page where the superscript is placed (footnote) or to put all the work (endnote) or to put all th footnotes placed at the bottom of the page: If the source is used more than once in a research project, follow this guide: When used again, instead of writing the full quote a second time in the footnote, it only includes: the author's last name, title or phrase for the title (if more than four words), and the page number used. This will reduce most of the quote information in the paper. Example: If the source is used successively, this guide is for shortened quotes and ibids: If you quote the same source constantly throughout your text, use a shortened version of the full excerpt in your footnote. The previous style version used the abbreviation ibid, short for ibidem. Ibidem is a Latin word meaning in the same place. It is used when referring to sources that have just been quoted in the document (with no other sources in between). The author will use ibid instead of writing down the source again. In the current Chicago version, the 17th version, ibid. is accepted but disliked. This is because ibid requires the reader to go back and look for the previously quoted source, an inconvenience that outweighs the benefits of shortening the quote. In addition, citations are abbreviated to concise, so using ibid doesn't always save line space. Excerpts shortened The first mention of the source must include all relevant information (e.g., the full author name, full title, publisher, date publisher, date published, etc.). The next mention should be an abbreviated version using this formula: Last Name, work Title, Page number. If there are two or three authors, list their full names in the order they appear in the source. If there are more than three authors, list the name of the first author followed by et al. Examples of shortened quotations (preferred format in 17th Edition): Philip R. Cateora et al., International Marketing, 28-29. Cateora et al., 28-29. Cateora et al., 377. Titles longer than four words are usually shortened. Focus on keeping the keywords out of the title and eliminating the beginning of a or the. Example: And to Think That I Saw It on Mulberry Street = Mulberry of typing quote information again, use the abbreviation ibid. Add the page number immediately after. If the same source AND the same page number are used successively, simply write Ibid. Similar examples above, but using ibid: Philip R. Cateora et al, International Marketing, (New York: McGraw Hill, 2020), 292-294. Cateora et al, International Marketing, 28-29. Ibid. Ibid., 45. Another example with two sources mentioned earlier in the text: Anthony Doerr, All the Light We Cannot See (New York: St. Martin's Press, 2007), 24-27. Ibid., 44. Ibid. Ibid., 133-134. Doerr, All the Light We Can't See, 397-401. Ibid., 405. Ibid., 405. Ibid., 411. For more clarification on footnote styles and endnotes in Chicago text, see the Chicago Manual of Style website.
