Kinderdenan Hmmm..... wie die duften! Skype is one of those services that love and hate in equal measure. If you find that you have to use it because it's the only way some of your contacts will communicate, you'll be happy that it's no longer necessary to have a message client installed – it can all be done from a browser... and an installed plugin. Editor's note: I don't really make sure there is much of a difference between using Skype on the desktop and via a plugin in the browser. Any way, you are installing software... So it's really up to you if you want to do that or so. Microsoft's acquisition of Skype should have made it clear that there was going to be development on the horizons. If you're a Outlook.com user, you can chat, and even make audio and video calls using the Skype for Outlook.com preview. The new feature is available in use in a plugin, and this is for Internet Explorer, Firefox and Chrome. If you're using another browser such as Opera or Safari, you'll have to stick with the main Skype app. Start by heading on to the Skype website and clicking the 'Sign in' link at the top of the page and then clicking the 'Microsoft account' link in the 'Sign in' section. Sign in to your Microsoft account. And if you already have a Skype account associated with another email address, you can choose to merge the two – just click on 'I have a Skype account' or 'I'm new to Skype' button. Click the 'Merge Accounts' button after you sign in to your existing account. Now, head over to Outlook.com sign in to your Microsoft account. You may find that there is a visible Messaging panel at the right of the page, but if this can't be seen, click the Speech button at the far right of the toolbar. Just what you see in the right hand messaging panel will depend on what you have used your Microsoft account so far – you may have already linked it to some other service. Beneath 'Add the chat people in' title, click on the contact link 'Skype'. As we mentioned, the Outlook Skyping is allowed in the use of a plugin, and you will be invited to install it now – just click on the 'Get Started' button. Click 'I agree – continue' and you'll be directed to the Skype plugin download. This takes the form of an .msi file that needs to be downloaded and executed. When the installation is complete, close the popup window and return to Outlook.com. You may need to refresh the page and re-enable the sassaging sidebar. Clicking on the search bar and a available contact list will be shown for you to choose from – of course you can also do a search for a specific person. Click a contact name and you can start a regular text based on chat. At the top of the Messenger window are buttons to start an audio or video call. Clicking on one of these with a separate pop window will be used to house your chat complete with a Skype app-style view. to look.
