Raffir Fiber Natural Fibers at 3D depth Raffir Fiber is a composite material based on natural vegetable fibers. These fibers are cast in a strong translucent tube. For example, the Ruger GP100 in 22 LR at 4.2 barrels – it was a great idea but wasn't considered good enough for regular production. Davidson went to Ruger with an order and Ruger fulfilled it. One of them has been in the store for a while and it's a significant shooter. Davidson's isn't the only outfit on that field of play – and neither is Ruger. But Ruger is known to do quite a few of these and the latest seen here is their eligible ruger Mark IV pistol This is a TALO distributor exclusive called Raffir Hunter TALO Edition. This animal is made with a 4.5 barrel chimney mounted on a stainless steel top. This is on top of the CNC-machine aluminum lower, which makes the usual car feel more like a Mark IV Target 5.5 weapon. This swirling stainless barrel muzzle is topped with a HI-VIZ fiber optic front view supported by HI-VIZ adjustable rear view – fortunately without added lines or points. The gun weighs 35 ounces Why is it Raffir Hunter? It has raffir composite shares. It is a different emotional arrangement, a slightly muted palm swelling type case. They have an interesting look that doesn't look good to me – others are probably taken in appearance – but Raffir Composites are unique. I don't see them when I fire a gun, so I call their stock a win. TALO states on its page: Raffir is a first-class composite material with fine brass and bronze snails inside. The strong side of the transparent posture corrects the eyes to the position and improves the 3D depth effect. Together, this uniformity of materials has a unique appearance and great strength. The frontal vision is a fiber optic thing for HIVIZ. There also seems to be HIVIZ on the back (below) - it looks nothing like previous versions of Ruger adjustable attractions. I like them. If you are interested in ordering a gun, it is model number 40132. It has 10 round Mark IV magazines, an OPAque white tube-rich HIVIZ polymer tool and an amber tube – as well as a front sight because the rear sight has no fiber optic elements. The polymer tool is called the LitePipe storage and installation key. The weapon is supplied in a hard plastic case. The assortment trip with the exclusive was interesting. I shot a few hundred rounds of various 22 LR, including the CCI Mini-Mag 40 grain, Hunter Match, Remington Thunderbolt bulk pack promotional 40 cereals, GECCO Semi-Auto 40 cereals and Federal Lightning (promotional) 40 cereals. I encountered a few failures (in removing the cooker pipe) stops with the Federal Lightning towards the end of the filming session. I check the operation, fired another 20 rounds of Remington Thunderbolt projectiles without any problems. The pair of stops may have been caused by the shooter or it may have been a (rather aged) projectile. By the way, the operation was transactionally unsanned. Getting the sights set the rounds at the point of aim was a matter of moments and a Brownells pistol screwdriver set for Ruger cannons. I found the CCI Mini Magi and Federal Hunter Match shot consistently well about 22 meters from the bench. Both produced groups of less than 2 inches, where the best three out of five – out of my mistake – go under an inch. Remington Thunderbolt, their affordable, best-selling rimfire tour, is rated as a high-speed round with an unspaced 40-grain pill. In addition to being value-priced, it seems to be quite consistent; I shoot a lot of these. Mark IV Raffir Hunter put five Remington bullets in 2 inches, and the top three crowded inches. It doesn't shoot like more expensive ammunition, but it shoots a lot of good for training and plinking. The Geco 22 Long Rifle Semi-Auto has a round nose bullet of 40 Grain wires. Optimized for semi-automatic rifles and pistols, the stuff can be found in approximately nickel rounds online. I've fired a lot of guns at it. Like the other rounds I shot through Mark IV on this trip, it shot very well at relatively low cost. It put five laps 5/8 and the top three go to half an inch, as shown in the attached photo. I brought a sibling to the Mark IV Raffir Hunter: Ruger GP-100 22 KGP-22-4, this Davidson's Exclusive, available from their weapons gallery. It's a 40-ounce double-acting revolver with a 10-shot cylinder with 4 stainless steel half-strength contour barrels topped with Novak fiber optic frontal vision. The prosecutor's bet is quite heavy and quite smooth. I shot them side by side. Mark IV's shorter, lighter trigger was a joy, but it's still a solid trigger. For sports use, I like the fiber optic sight of both weapons. Distributors seem to understand what the consumer wants to buy – which makes the distributor's exclusive models worth watching from any manufacturer. These are very nice. - - Rich Grassi Caliber: 22 Long Rifle Stock: Satin stainless magazine Capacity: 10 barrel length (in): 4.5 Fluted Bull Barrel Fiber Optical Front sight adjustable rear sight Raffir Grip Panels 2 Magazines The included Raffir is a first-class composite material with fine brass and bronze eyes inside.
