Pretentious game 2

Last October, 53 cars showed up at Lowe's Motor Speedway, in Charlotte, North Carolina, to compete for 43 starting positions in the Dollar General 300 NASCAR Nationwide Series race, making it a tough field to crack. Defying the odds, little-known Johnny Chapman blistered the 1.5-mile speedway with a lap averaging more than 180 mph and qualified 11th in his No. 90 MSRP Motorsports Chevy, curious-looking because it was all white and without sponsor decals. The burly, 40-year-old Chapman was elated when he pulled into the garage. We had some things clamming up in the car during training, he said. They told me they had it fixed, so I trusted the crew and just drove it in there to see if it would last or not, he said. I just need to thank these guys and thank the Lord for letting me be able to do what I love to do. ____ But before the green flag fell that night to start the race, Chapman quietly gave up his hard-earned 11th. This move raised no eyebrows in his pit because he had no pit crew. The only evidence that the pit was occupied was the presence of a lone, unmanned tool wagon. After eight laps, the rain stalled and as the other cars eased down the pit road, Chapman and his teammate, Terry Cook, drive the No. 91 car, headed to the garage, parked in their stalls, turning off their engines, and quit. Chapman was still all smiles, and after a round of handshakes and high-fives, he headed inside the team transporting to switch to street clothes. NASCAR's official race report states that both cars fell out of the race after eight laps due to a vibration. Before you conjure up a vision of cars shaking so violently that they rattled the fillings in their drivers' teeth, we should let you in on a little secret. Vibration was a ploy. The cars were running fine. The drivers just quit. And that had been the plan all along. Without pit crews to service their cars, they had to quit. _____ Every week in 2008, for a handful of teams in the nationwide series, the decision to start and park after only a few laps bridge between losing one's shirt and actually making a few bucks. Chapman's car won $21,358 from the race purse, while Cook's bet yielded $21,318, so MSRP Motorsports won a total of $42,676 this weekend at Charlotte. MSRP probably spent $20,000 to enter, practice, and qualify the two cars, so their profit could have been about $22,600. But the profits were only theirs if they quit. they run the full race, the cost of as many as six sets of tires per car and engine wear and tear alone would have wiped out any take-home earnings, and the cost of fielding a pit crew would have sent the team deep in the hole. That's why teams need big sponsorships. Top sponsor deals, even in this No. 2 series, are estimated at $4 million a year, working out at nearly $115,000 per race-10 times the budget for a start-and-park car. I play when I need a break from checking work email at home or working at my house. I know it sounds like only something a techy-type engineer would do, but you should try it. I play while I'm doing other things, like cooking in the kitchen, or waiting for a delivery on a Saturday afternoon. I find it funny that most casual gamers are women, but most won't admit to it... I'm not sure why, either. I don't think it's anything to be embarrassed about... some people do crafts, some listen to music, I play games on my computer. My mom actually turned me on casual games when I saw her play one through AOL one Sunday when I was visiting. I didn't really know these games that you can play for a few minutes at a time and are either free or cheap to buy. So almost right behind PlayFirst was in watching me at work for a deskside meeting at their casual game. They gave me a free trial of their hit Diner Dash and I've been a casual gamer ever since. Recently I have played Dream Chronicles 2 and I am anxiously awaiting the release of Dream Chronicles 3. At least I hope there will be a Dream Chronicles 3!!! If you have 15 minutes you want to kill I would definitely recommend trying it. From a technicolor open-world skating game to an almost impossible Flash game that taunts you like you don't, this week's game is about making sure you get moving and stay there. Jumping Line is a simple game, but it is also very attractive done. You play as a well, jump line, and you will have to navigate from platform to platform. Since you constantly jump your jumps is more a matter of timing than usual, but the game's visuals make that feel more relaxed than hectic. If you think modern video games are just too easy, you'll probably enjoy Give Up, a Flash game that quickly ramps up the difficulty to a punishing degree and then rubs your face in it. The game even offers a large GIVE UP button so you can admit your mistake at any time. Wuss.Your browser does not support iframes. Zineth is a fun new free downloadable game for PC and Mac. The game plays a bit like a hyped-up open-world version of Jet Grind Radio, and although it doesn't have the same visual sharpness as JGR it shares its love of bright expressive colors. For a student project Zineth is an impressive achievement and it is definitely worth your time. Note: When you buy something after clicking on links in our articles, we can earn a small commission.

Games often have goals, structure and rules to declare results and winners. Many games, such as sports, rely on physical prowess, while others have mental and psychological stimulation. Games have been part of every culture since ancient times. They contribute to facilitating learning and boosting children's development. As an educational tool, game children learn to master certain skills, overcome obstacles and achieve goals. Adults also benefit when they play games, which makes it exempts them from work and obligations. Games also help maintain social connections with other people. Although it is typically considered extracurricular activities, some games of people take place as professional professions. The adjective ominously means ominous or significant, referring to a sign or prediction that something important is about to happen. Ominous can also mean pompous or even important. (This second meaning overlaps with pretentious. The adjective pretentious means full of pretexs, making excessive or unjustifiably claims to be important or sophisticated. Notice how these two words are spelled: ominous ends in -tous; pretentious ends in -tious. No one spoke. But they all knew that this was an ominous moment, and that losing Skye that day would say something that would affect their lives. (Richard S. Wheeler, North Star. Forge, 2009)The stationery had got her as a wedding gift, embossed with a monogram of her new initials, by a Southampton aunt, boxes of it; Marcia had laughed and thought it was hideously pretentious, the essence of everything she had married Harold to escape, and used it so rarely when the thank you notes were written that after twelve years it had not been used up. (John Updike, par. Knopf, 1968)Elizabeth Bishop's poetry is rarely ominous or grand, and never pretentious or grandiose. (Michael Ryan, A Difficult Grace: On Poets, Poetry and Writing. University of Georgia Press, 2000)I must have parchment! Oh, but I like to write about parchment! Every time you turn on a side it rumbles like thunder. My words are so ominous - it's ominous, dear, not pretentious-it seems appropriate. Like Jove. (David Blixt, Master of Verona. St. Martin's Press, 2007) [P] ortentous can be either ominous (an ominous event) or pompous (his ominous attitude); pretentious means pretending to be important. Since a pretentious person can also be pompous/ominous, there is a risk of confusion with these words. Prefer ominous or pompous to ominous. (Wynford Hicks, quite literally: Problem words and how to use them. Routledge, 2004)The main difference is that an ominous man may just be as important as he seems, but a pretentious one may not be as important as he claims. (Kenneth G. Wilson, Columbia Guide to Standard American English. Columbia University Press, 1993)Ominous . . . used to mean 'portending evil; ominous and has come to mean pompous; self-state, possibly because it sounds as pretentiously mixed with portly - but there is poetic justice in it, as pretentiousness can be ominous.
