Is in asl

The Firefox browser does not support mp4 video format. It is used to identify a specific person or thing near the hand or to be indicated or experienced; referring to a specific thing or situation you just mentioned. This sign (pointing to the base palm) is a formal quotation as a separate word, but in reality, it is rarely used in the signature. This/it (a determinant in ASL). This determinant is localized, which means that in sentences, spatial reference is variable. A common determinant in THE ASL signature is the Y-hand shape for this or that. And, the other common sign is THAT-ONE (a brightness that is not really ONE). A brightness symbol for ONE is IX (indexing). Gloss phrase or phrase: SINCE(aah) ME BORN+GROW-UP(aah) THAT?- ME TELL-OTHER++ NEVER(em) English equivalent: I've never told this anyone else in whole life. The aah morphem mouth along with the (slightly slow) movement in these two signs has a meaning that can be easily lost. This whole sentence has intonation (emphasis) that is conceptually equivalent to the English phrase. To express the concept of son in ASL you do not use a specific sign, but consider what you mean and choose the sign or set of signs and grammatical characteristics that more closely match your meaning. Very typically the concept of are is expressed as part of a question that can be answered with a yes or a no. When we ask such questions we raise our eyebrows. Therefore, in a yes/no question, the concept of are expressed through raising eyebrows. 're...?' - raised eyebrows + INDEX-(pro.1) For example, if you want to ask Are you married? Would you sign THE HOUSE? as you bowed your head a little further on and raised your eyebrows. Example: Are you married? Another way we can help establish the concept of ARE by asking a question is to repeat the YOU sign at the end of the sentence. For example, could I sign TE CASASTE? People often ask me why some ASL phrases repeat the YOU sign again at the end of the sentence. The answer is that it depends on how clear you want to be. The same goes for English. Version 1: Did you get married? Version 2: Are you married? Suppose someone asked you, why do English speakers use the word ARE in version two of that sentence? Does it change the meaning? I would probably answer that both sentences mean the same thing, but the second sentence is a little more formal and clear. In English, the question Did you get married? It is based solely on raising the tone of voice at the end of the married word to indicate that it is a question, while the phrase Are you married? it is based on both the extra word ARE and the elevation of the tone of voice in the married word. Similarly, ASL sometimes repeats the YOU sign at the end of a sentence to leave you're asking a question and waiting for an answer. Here's an example, this time about divorce and repetition of the YOU signal at the end. Are you divorced? The ARE concept is also expressed in other ways. For example, if you wanted to say, There are 15 sandwiches, you could sign: HAVE 15 SANDWICHES Are - head-nod If you wanted to say, They are here. You could sign: THAT HERE-(head nod). If you mean they're like in fact, then a good sign to use is the sign of the sign of true. See: TRUE. There is a signed English sign for the word are. That sign places an R hand on the lips and moves it forward. That sign is not ASL and I do not recommend it for use in an ASL test or in the ASL classroom. Want to help support ASL University?
