(October 2011) Wenger SA Type Société anonyme Predecessor Paul Boëchat & Cie Wenger & Cie, Co. S.A. Founded 1893; 127 years ago (1893) Founder Paul Boëchat Headquarters Delémont, Canton of Jura, Switzerland Products Swiss army knives, cutlery, watches, travel equipment Number of employees 150 Parent Victorinox AG Website www.wenger.ch Wenger Swiss Army knife Wenger was one of two companies that produced swiss army knives. Delémont-based Wenger acquired rival Victorinox in 2005. Since 2013, Wenger's Swiss army knives have been integrated into the Victorinox collection (such as the Delémont collection); The Wenger brand remains for watches and licensed products. [2] The history of Wenger's History of the S.A. is strongly linked to the history of the Swiss army knife. Origins Founded in 1893 in Courtetelle in the Delémont Valley in the canton of Jura, industrial cutlery house Paul Boëchat & Cie (the next Wenger) received a contract from the Swiss army to produce knives as the second manufacturer of industrial cutlery in Switzerland. [3] In 1897, Theodore Wenger, a minister who served in the Usa, returned home to Switzerland and was hired by a group of entrepreneurs who bought Boëchat & Cie two years earlier [3] (later renaming Wenger et Cie.). [4] One of Wenger's first acts was to acquire a manufacturer of spoons and forks, which he moved to a rented factory in Delémont. In 1900, a new 18,000-square-foot (1,700 square meter) facility was built. The dishes operations as well as the production of Courtetelle cutlery were incorporated into a new plant called Fabrique Suisse de Coutellerie et Services. [3] In 1908, the Swiss army decided to split the contract, with half the order going to Victorinox, in the German-speaking canton of Schwyz, and the other half to Wenger in the Franco-speaking part of the canton of Bern. [5] Kaspar Oertli acquired a majority stake in the company in 1929, following the death of Theo Wenger. In 1988, Wenger began making watches, a year before Victorinox. [6] Crisis and reboot After the 9/11 attacks This was also the case with the Swiss manufacturers of army knives, in particular Wenger S.A. Changing airport security regulations, which prevented the wearing of pocket knives, reduced the sale of Swiss army knives in duty-free shops. The crisis led to Wenger's acquisition by his competitor Victorinox in 2005. [7] S Supporting Victorinox. Wenger was able to maintain his own production and branding of Swiss army knives and watches. Wenger knives are advertised as a Genuine Swiss Army Knife and Victorinox as the Original Swiss Army Knife. Rebranding after the acquisition after victorinox was acquired, in 2005 Wenger S.A. began to develop new products. In the process of rebranding himself as a provider of multifunctional tools for outdoor adventures, [8] Wenger began working with individuals like Ueli Steck and Mike Horn acting as their brand ambassadors providing each of them with an appropriate multi-functional tool tailored to their specific challenges. [9] In addition, Wenger worked with Alinghi to provide the Mariners with an appropriate multifunctional tool. [10] Most recently Wenger supports the Patagonia Expedition Race. [11] With the product line merging on January 30, 2013, Wenger and Victorinox announced that a separate knife brand would be merged into one brand: Victorinox. The press release states that Wenger's factory in Delémont will continue to produce knives and all staff here will keep their jobs. They went on to specify that the range of items from Wenger's line would remain in production under the Victorinox brand. Wenger's U.S. headquarters will merge with Victorinox's location in Monroe, Connecticut. Wenger's watch and licensing business will continue as a standalone brand. [12] A recent development in March 2016, during an exhibition in Basel 2016, Victorinox renewed the Wenger brand by marketing highlighting Swiss values at a reasonable price. Wenger has changed his slogan to Swiss Society since 1893 from the Maker of a real Swiss army knife that has been used for decades. [13] In 2017, Victorinox released a Swiss army knife model called Wenger Red. This knife has the Wenger logo and the Wenger brand on the scale of the knife. This knife comes in a box with the Victorinox logo and brand. This part number is produced in Delémont, Switzerland. This is the only Swiss army knife with the Wenger logo and a brand that is produced and sold as of today. Products Two main product line Wenger SA are Genuine Swiss Army Knife and Wenger Watch. In addition, Wenger S.A. produces kitchen cutlery under the brands Swibo, Grand Maitre. [14] Genuine Swiss Army Knife Most of the traditional products produced by Wenger are pocket knives with a body size of about 65 mm to 130 mm (2.5 to 5) and blades measuring approximately 50 mm to 100 mm (2 to 4) with functions such as openers and screwdrivers in a red or black case. [15] The special edition Giant Giant Swiss Army Knife is known for integrating various tools into one knife. Wenger integrated 87 instruments with 141 functions into a single knife called The Giant, which was featured in the Guinness Book of Records. [16] Heritage based on original plans of the Swiss Army knife from 1908 Wenger introduced a limited edition called Heritage. [17] Titanium Line, Alinghi Sui 1, Mike Horn Knife & Patagonia Expedition Race All three are multifunctional knives developed in collaboration with individuals and participating organizations that are suitable for their specific challenges. Titanium Line is a product suitable for speed climber challenges like Ueli Steck faces. [18] For Swiss Americas Cup participant Alinghi Wenger has developed an easy to use knife for sailors. [19] As Wenger's main sponsor of the Patagonia Expedition Race, Wenger has created a knife suitable for the challenges race participants have to face. [20] For adventurer Mike Horn Wenger released the knife in 2009. [21] Wenger watches Wenger watches are made in Switzerland. The registered office of the company is located in Delémont, Switzerland. Wenger's watches are reportedly linked to basic ideas and the concept of a Swiss army knife, which have a multifunctional external focus. In addition, Wenger produces several watches focusing only on elegance. [22] Other Wenger products also make notebooks that can function as a double wallet. Wenger produced bayonets for the Swiss Stgw 90 assault rifle. The bayonet has a total length of 310 mm and a muzzle ring with a diameter of 22 mm. The bayonets were produced exclusively for Wenger and Victorinox's Swiss army (before the two companies merged). In North America, licensed products using Wenger and SwissGear trademarks are owned independently of Victorinox SA, and are used to market camping equipment (especially tents, backpacks and sleeping bags), luggage, backpacks and office/business supplies.
