And while higher-quality schools often come with higher property taxes, homeowners in such counties are eventually returned through higher house prices. Getting returns sounds great, but how much are we talking about? New research from Realtor.com shows that to enter a desirable school district, 9% of buyers say they will pay 11% to 20% on the budget. Separately, 17% reported they wanted to pay more to be close enough for their children to walk to and from school. Related: 7 Renovation Tips to Boost Resale ValueIn the showdown between amenities for adults and education for kids, you guessed it: the kids win. Realtor.com found that 62% of buyers would pass a spa at home if it meant going into the appropriate school district. 50% will admit easy access to shopping, while 44% will give up space in the form of a bonus room. If the home you plan to sell is located in a highly coveted school district, do everything in your power to highlight that fact in all your real estate marketing materials. Many potential buyers are parents of children currently in the school system, so be sure to get the word out between neighbors and local friends. If you're buying a home, use a search engine that lets you filter by school district, as county boundaries don't always match town, village, and city streets. After all, you cannot assume that your children will be prescribed to attend the same school as the kids down the block or even next door. Home of the Randall Pandas Nominated by Tina SugarStudents celebrates their favorite principal's birthday. John Wallace inspires his students every day to be the best they can be in his morning announcement. (Credit: Tina Sugar) Our elementary school is a place that everyone loves to be. We are a grade 3-5 school with great students, great teachers, and the most amazing principal, John Wallace. Our children who come to school are ready to learn and show us their talents and work hard every day. My school not only has great families and dedicated teachers, we also have our wonderful principal, John Wallace. Every morning, Mr. Wallace came across the speakers to talk to our pandas. He shared with us his words of intelligence and every day our students were grateful to listen to him. He told them to believe in their dreams and the dreams of others. He helps them heal when our world is in pain and celebrates with them when they have done well or worked hard to achieve a goal. Our morning announcement includes Lunch menu and commitment to our country, but it's not just because Mr. Wallace talks to each of our classes as he speaks directly to each student. Mr. Wallace taught them how to be good people, caring for a and how to make not only him proud but also parents and teachers proud of who they are and what they do. Our students admire Mr. Wallace and his kindness, humor, and ability to see life through the eyes of our children while teaching them about respect, responsibility, and love. His legendary sign is, The choices you make today, shape your world tomorrow. Thanks racoons! The mural of kindness and what it represents H. Then, locate the district name to get the district's phone number and call the district for confirmation. After GreatSchools.org to get the district name, visit the district's website. Many public school districts have interactive school finder apps that allow families to enter their home addresses and receive a list of elementary, middle, and high schools respectively. At the very least, most have maps showing district boundaries. It's helpful to take this step because the district's school district areas may vary from year to year, so the information collected from neighbors, brokers, and other local sources may be inaccurate. In addition, most state education departments carry lists of each county in the state organized alphabetical by name, or number by district number, and often have maps showing boundaries for each county. Here, you can also find the district's demographics, grade point averages, school rankings, and other useful information. As a final confirmation step, call the district office, and ask to speak with an admissions specialist who will help find the appropriate school for each child in the family.
