Professor of psychology at Beth Morling University? Delaware. He attended Carleton College in Northfield, Minnesota, and received his Ph.D. from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. Before coming to Delaware, he served at Union College (New York) and Muhlenberg College (Pennsylvania). In addition to teaching research methods almost every semester in Delaware, he also studies undergraduate studies in cultural psychology, a seminar on self-concept and a postgraduate course in psychology teaching. His research in the field of cultural psychology explores how cultural practices shape people's motivations. Dr. Morling received a Fulbright fellowship in Kyoto, Japan, and received an award from the Delaware State Professor of the Year (2014), the Council for Advances and Support in Education (CASE) and the Carnegie Foundation for the Advances of Education. Expert author Beth Morling, who takes samples from popular media and magazines, emphasizes the relevance of her book Research Methods in Psychology: Evaluating the World of Knowledge 3rd Edition (PDF) and inspires a love for the subject. Yes, college students learn to design research studies, but they also see the value of assessing the research claims they face in everyday life. Version 3 creates this successful foundation by offering students new ways to practice what they learn. NEW Study Provides a step-by-step method for evaluating claims through examples, and a NEW adaptive learning tool, InQuizitive, allows psychology students to practice what they learn and strengthens their understanding.
