Denver bouldering club

Facebook 38 Twitter 0 LinkedIn 0 More DBC Location Sheridan/Englewood. (Photos courtesy of DBC) In its third location, the Denver climbing gym is approaching the northern suburbs. Denver Bouldering Club has leased a 15,000 square foot mall at 720 West 84th Ave. Thornton's new boulders in the gym. Owner Thomas Betterton said he wanted a spot that could entice new customers while offering existing members new climbing routes for the facility, which was not too far from the ride. People who live 5 miles from our central location (near the intersection of Interstate 25 and 6th Avenue) live more than an hour away during rush hour, Betterton said. It's a good way to get in without fighting traffic (if you live on the north side of the city), he said. And on Saturday or Sunday, someone from Denver or Englewood could get this opportunity quickly and make some climb. Betterton said the Denver Bouldering Club, which has two existing locations and eight full-time employees, plans to invest about $500,000 to $1 million in the new site. The business brings in just over $1 million in annual revenue. The expansion takes place during the boom bouldering. Boulder's Movement Climbing + Fitness opened a 50,000-square-foot bouldering-only gym in RiNo 2018 and Boulder's Spot Bouldering Gym added second place in the Golden Triangle in April. And yet another bouldering gym is on tap golden. Bouldering involves climbing up to 15-foot walls without harnesses or ropes. The Denver Bouldering Club began in 2009 as a private club for climbers. Betterton said boulders, where participants climb 15-foot walls without harnesses or ropes, are a fast-growing part of the climbing industry. As for how the outdoor Front Range is, climbing is underserved, Betterton said, adding that boulders are easier for new customers to try. With rope climbing, you're down belaying, and I'm climbing up, and we're not really hanging out with part of it, he said. With bouldering, its four or five friends and we work a couple of hard moves. We'll talk about it. We're talking about how our days went by, it's like a Super Bowl party. Some people look really intensely and others like the social vibe of hanging out with friends. Betterton also said bouldering takes just a 10-minute orientation before a beginner is there to climb. You can do it yourself or 10 people, he said. And it doesn't require the same training and safety equipment. The walls reach about 15 feet. The 112,000-square-foot shopping centre in Thornton is owned by Dunton Commercial, which bought it earlier this year for $6 million with plans to turn around the property. It was only 63 percent rented. Nate Melchior, director of Dunton, said space at the Denver Bouldering Club to occupy earlier The gym that got out of business. I've always thought that space is perfect for rock climbing, Melchior said. Part of it is 25-foot-high ceilings; originally racket ball courts. Melchior said he cold-named Betterton.
