As of 2019, there is currently only one written test used in the state of Florida and that is the Basic Ability Test for Criminal Justice (CJBAT). Florida Basic Abilities Test (FBAT) is no longer in use. If you want to join a law enforcement agency in the state of Florida, you need to prepare for a complex recruitment process and a series of tests before being hired. Your first step towards hiring will be through Florida Basic Ability Testing (FBAT). Once you pass this exam, you will be eligible for promotion during the recruitment process. The number of FBAT participants has increased significantly over the past few years, meaning competition for the work of a law enforcement officer is getting tighter. Therefore, it is very important to prepare for the exam and pass it with better scores than your competitors. To be successful, you need to know what to expect and how to properly prepare for FBAT. The guide below provides answers to some key exam-related questions with some practical advice that can help any ambitious law enforcement officer find their job in the state of Florida. An overview of FBAT FBAT was developed to test and measure the cognitive abilities of ambitious law enforcement officers to meet success criteria in this area. To be able to participate in a basic recruitment program in Florida, applicants should first pass the FBAT. The test is based on a work task analysis and basically predicts the person's chances of success in a training program. Basic capacity testing requirements for applicants to enter the Basic Recruitment and Law Enforcement Training Program are approved by the Criminal Justice Standards and Training Commission under Section 943.17, F.S., and further details in F.A.C. 11B-35.0011(1). BAT is distributed only in the state of Florida and results are valid for a period of four years. The test can be done both in computer or paper format and in pencil. It is up to applicants to decide which option is better for them. There is no difference in the two formats. The Florida Department of Law Enforcement (FDLE) administers BAT's program and scores but it has contracted with private testing centers to hold exams and candidates. What does FBAT contain? FBAT contains proprietary multiple choice questions with a possible answer. The number of questions may vary depending on the test provider but the most common option is with 120 questions that need to be answered in 2 and a half hours. The test is divided into 8 subs sections, each containing 15 questions. There is a set of cognitive abilities that the FBAT tests to determine the applicant's ability to succeed at the training center and then continue in the job. These are: The ability to write Reasoned reasoning reasoning reasoning order situations memorize flexible orientation space of closing Tests are officially divided into three sections of language testing, visual, and reasoning abilities. Language section This part of the test measures the following two abilities of the candidate: Understand writing - the purpose of the question is to assess your ability to understand a written text. You will have to read a text and then choose the best answer out of the four offered, proving that you have understood what you have read. This skill is necessary because law enforcement officers deal with a lot of written documents such as city ordinances, Florida statutes, legal newsletters, etc. Written expressions - this section focuses on spelling and grammar as they are important skills used to write reports, memos, declarations and other documents. You have an incomplete sentence and you must choose which one is most suitable out of the four options offered. Visualization Section This part of the test tests how candidates can cope with ssize orientation and keep in mind to see what their mental visual abilities are. Sy space orientation is used to check whether applicants can use and read maps, layouts, or compasses to determine the exact location, decide how shortest to a certain point, or describe the location of an object related to another object. This skill is very important since a police officer, for example, quite often needs to determine the shortest way to get to the scene of an incident. In the test, you will have to answer questions such as: You are at the intersection of Str. 1 and Str. 2. Choose the shortest route to the police department and you will be presented with four options to choose from. Remember to test your ability to memorize a photo or text and then describe it to others or answer questions about it. This skill is very important as often the officers need to describe a suspicion that they have just seen. During the test, you will be given a few minutes to study an image or text and then you will have to answer a set of multiple choice questions without looking at them anymore but using your memory. Reasoning Capabilities Section This part of the FBAT evaluates the four skills needed for a law enforcement officer's position: Problem sensitivity – here you need to show that you can detect signals that suggest that a problem or situation may escalate or not. Questions may include various situations such as whether a medical condition requires urgent treatment or whether the data received is accurate and reliable. This ability is essential for law enforcement officers who need to make such calls on an almost daily basis. Reasoning - this skill shows that you have the ability to apply a broader concept to a particular case. For example, to correctly use a law or a rule that determines the crime of an action and decides what is the best approach in a particular case. Compulsive rule reasoning - this skill suggests that you can use a specific example to formula build a conclusion or rule. It is checked using pie charts, graphs and/or data tables that you need to explain correctly. Order information - you need to prove that you can order an event in order of time based on the information you have. It may come from testimony given by witnesses, victims, first aid responder, reports from other police officers and the like. The questions that are in BAT will test this ability that requires streamlining or in the order of time a set of events or policies. What is a passing score? To pass FBAT successful candidates should reach 77% or higher in case, they are taking the test offered by Miami Dade College, which is one of the most popular. It is important to note that passing scores may vary depending on the test provider. The score is valid over a four-year period, which basically means that if you take the BAT and pass it, you don't need to file immediately with law enforcement because your score will be valid for a considerable period of time.. Recently, FDLE posted an important update on its website, which mentions changes in passing scores related to a period of time. The change means that some applicants previously deemed ine person to participate in a training program can now do just that. Changes to BAT law enforcement stipulate that applicants who have reached 70% or more between June 1, 2010 and February 1, 2016 are considered to have successfully passed BAT. The change was approved by the Criminal Justice Training and Standards Commission. Results have been updated on the Automated Training Management System and will be effective until February 2, 2020. This means that more applicants will be able to conduct the training program and contact an agency of their choice. For candidates who are about to take the BAT exam, this solved into a higher competition when it comes to the recruitment process and actual selection. The results are stored in electronic records of FDLE's Automated Training Machine System and are available to all Florida criminal justice authorities. Note that official BAT results are not provided by FDLE to individuals. How to register FBAT and where to participate in FDLE testing decided to use external testing providers to create, manage and manage BAT. FDLE has contracted with these private providers for their services but retains the same scores, contract issues, program clarification and enforcement as part of our own responsibilities. The providing private test providers means that there are small differences in length and testing time depending on the center you have chosen. Questions can vary between 104 and 120, in general, and the test time is about two or two and a half hours. There is also a fee payable, which is also determined by the test provider but is usually around $40-$70. Tests can be carried out at Commission-certified training centers, criminal justice selection centers and criminal justice agencies. Applicants should contact the test provider for specific details on how to register for the exam and check all other requirements. In most cases, you'll be able to schedule your test date and time using the test center's website. On test day, you will arrive at least 15 years before your scheduled time.
