Text No, it's not-it's never enough. I love them, Tony-I love them deeply. Some people might have been away, but I couldn't. I know they're doing pretty weird things... but they're gay, and they're funny, and... I don't know... there are kind nobility about them [... ...] He goes deeper Tony. Your mother believes in spirituality because it's fashionable, and your father raises orchids because he can afford it. My mother writes plays because eight years ago a typewriter was introduced here by mistake [... ...] And look at grandma. Thirty-five years ago, he just quit his job one day. He took office in the elevator and landed again. He just stopped. He may have been a rich man, but he said it took too much time. So, thirty-five years later, he just collected snakes, and went to the circuses, and begins. It never happens to any of them... Hart, Moss & George S. Kaufman. More on this monologue You can't take with you THE STORY: At first Sycamores seems mad, but it's not long before we realize that if they are mad, the rest of the world is madder. Unlike these great people are dissatisfied with Kirbys. The plot shows how Tony, the attractive young son of Kirbys, falls in love with Alice Sycamore and brings his parents to lunch at Sycamore's home on the wrong evening. Kirbys, who are invited to eat cheap food, experienced shock to suggest to Alice that marriage to Tony is not an issue. Sycamores, however, while sympathetic to Alice, finds it difficult to understand his point of view. Meanwhile, Tony, who knows that Sycamores is right and his own people are wrong, will not give up on her, and eventually Mr. Kirby is converted into a happy madness of Sycamores, especially since he goes on a visit to the ex-grand duchess, earning her a living as a waitress. There is no mention so far of the strange activities of certain members of the household involved in the production of fireworks; and the printing tools laid down in the cabin; neither Rheba maid and her friend Donald; than his grandfather's interview with a tax collector when he tells him he doesn't believe in income tax. One of the most popular and successful games of modern times. George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart's Pulitzer Prize-winning comedy, You Can't Take It with You, premiered at booth theater on December 14, 1936, and was a respectable run of 838 performances. Since then, she has had several successful Broadway revivals and was in 1938. The basis of the Academy Award-winning film directed by Frank Life is pleasantly daft at the spacious uptown New York City home of Grandfather Vanderhof, a vibrant little man of seventy-five who for the past thirty-five years has been resolutely relaxed and have fun collecting snakes and taking part in start exercises. He has a low income from a rented house and an interesting family, which, like grandpa, does as they like. Penelope Vanderhof Sycamore, or Penny, his daughter, a gentle and plump little woman of fifty, writes in her eleventh play, playwrighting offered itself eight years ago when a typewriter was delivered to the house by mistake. Essie, her pixie daughter, about twenty-nine years old, a dance enthusiast, wears ballet slippers almost all the time, but as a vocation she makes love dream candies, which her husband, Ed Carmichael, of xylophone devotion, sells. Paul Sycamore, penelope man, produces fireworks in the basement, with the help of Mr. DePinna, who came home to deliver ice eight years ago and has stayed so far. Granddaughter Alice is a lovely, quiet and ordinary twenty-two girl. Rheba, a chef, and Donald, her friend and helper, complete the home, but a semi-official member is Mr. Kolenkhov, a Russian dancer who gives Essie dance lessons. Essie, while dancing dreamily on Ed's xylophone, just remembered informing Grandpa that there had been some letters to him in the last few weeks from the United States government (no one remembers just what became of them). Alice returns home from work and creates a mild thrill when she reports that the boss's son Tony Kirby is urging her to go to the theater later. Alice loves and understands her family, but she begs them to be their best behavior when Tony arrives. While Alice is dressing up, a young man comes to the door and Penny congratulates him on the effective, thinking that he is Kirby. But he turns out to be Mr. Henderson, an income agent whose letters to his grandfather did not respond. He wants to collect twenty-two years worth of back income taxes from him. Grandpa questions him by pointing out what he would get for his money, and Mr. Henderson leaves with threats. On his exit he emerged into pet snakes, praying for a test greeting bomb from the basement, and abandoning his Panama hat, which, coincidentally, just fits grandpa. Mr. Kirby, a handsome young man not long from Yale, arrives shortly thereafter and meets a glowing family. Before Alice could hurry down, a friendly grandfather offered him a tomato, Penny passed candy from a gypsum skull to an ashtray, and Mr. DePinna thinks he remembers having read that Tony's father had recently been accused. Alice and Kirby go to the theater. When they return later in the evening, the site is in the dark, but the strains of Donald's accordion can be heard at the top, and sometimes there is a loud bang from in the basement below. Donald blooms in his nightgown for some sweets, while Penny, in a bathrobe, makes a short look to get his manuscript Sex takes a vacation. Essie and Ed return from the movie and casually discuss grandpa's approval of them having a baby. Tony eventually takes the opportunity to tell Alice that he loves her. She admits her love for him, but declares that her family is a different world than his --it just doesn't work. Tony convinces her, however, that they can't live alone. A week later, there is plenty of activity and worry about Alice-planning to meet for dinner with Tony's parents, who are invited the next night. The visitor to the day is Gay Wellington, an actress whom Penny met on a bus and encouraged to read her game. Ms. Wellington, an enthusiastic drinker, is now quite weak in gin and seeing the effects of grandpa's snake, passed on the couch. Details of the epoch party were resolved in the evening, and Penny, in a smock and rakish tam-o'-shanter, completes a disc thrower-mr painting. DePinna, in a Roman costume, poses as a model. Miss Wellington, still on the couch, opens her eyes, sees Mr. DePinn and leaves again. Grandpa found a few feathered darts and threw them at targets, sometimes regretting looking at Ms. Wellington's right ass. Huge and hairy p. Kolenkhov, t-shirt this hot night, teaches Essie, who is in full ballet costume, some new dances are turning. Ed plays xylophone. The doorbell rings, and in this environment come three Kirbys, full evening dress. Tony seems to have confused the date of the party and they arrived a day earlier. The Kirbys are very embarrassed and start to withdraw, but grandpa insists that they come. Penny seconds for him with a guarantee that the Sycamores were just spending a quiet evening at home. The snake is removed to the quiet Mrs. Kirby, and Penny sends Donald to A. and P. Frankfurters (Mr. Kirby suffers from indigestion), canned corn and soup. Alice, who has just come home, is a nightmare tonight. First, Ms. Wellington snorts back into consciousness and weaves out of the room, pausing to call hello. Cutie! P. Kirby and cozy us with her hair. After dinner, mr. Kolenkhov, discussing wrestling, suddenly hurls mr. Kirby to the floor and sits triumphantly on it. Later, Penny's insistence, they all play the word game, which develops hints of some discord among senior Kirbys. Alice refuses when Ms. Kirby suggests it's time to go. She tells Tony that their romance is impossible. The elder Kirbys vacationed, but soon returned grouped by Justice Department agents who became suspicious of random messages (such as Dynamite Capitoll), which Ed, who just likes to print, has been shrouded in his candy boxes. G-men found in the basement and order all to be arrested. They refused to allow Mr. DePinna returned to the basement of her pipe and as the party is marshaled for a trip to the police station, years of supplying fireworks, pinwheels and assorted fireworks explodes and shakes the house. The next day, the Sycamores are a little repelled by the collapse of Alice's romance, though they cheer up a little when they remember that Ms. Kirby was put in the same cell with Rheba and a strip teaser, and that mr. Kirby was unhappy when told to share her bath with Donald. All, after a night in jail, received suspended sentences for fireworks without a license. Mr Kirby refused to explain why he was on the premises at all. Tony came on a fruitless assignment to see Alice. Kolenkhov is there and asks if he can invite the Grand Duchess, Olga Katrina, who has a day off from her duties as a waitress at Kids, for dinner. Sycamores is thrilled, and the Grand Duchess-who-inches grand duchess, despite an ancient dinner dress and moth-eating fur-sweeps in soon she took charge of the kitchen to make blintzes. Mr. Kirby comes to pick up Tony (who is now ready to go, after repeated rebuffs by Alice), but he is suspended by grandpa's challenge that Tony is too nice for a boy to wake up twenty years from now... mixed and dissatisfied with how his father is. Outraged Mr. Kirby shouts that he is not unhappy. It feels like an un-American grandfather argument that money is chasing not everything- you can't take it with you. Tony supports grandfather's argument for a happy life, recalling Mr. Kirby said that he still secretly cherishes forbidden boyhood saxophone in the back of his wardrobe. Tony admits that he deliberately confused the date of the dinner so that his people could see a really happy family. He declares that he is too forever with his father's duties, which he hates. Mr. Kirby looks at his son with a new interest when the Grand Duchess seems to be asking how many of them will be for dinner. Tsar always tell me, Olga, don't be mistaken with the blintzs, she says. Grandpa presents awed p. Kirby, who agrees that he would like to greatly stay for dinner with Tony, who now includes a happy Alice. Penny interrupts to recall that another letter apologizes to the grandfather, who the government discovered is dead and does not owe a penny. It seems that eight years ago, Sycamores was casually buried by Charlie, a milkman who had been staying with them for five years, by grandfather's name because no one knew his name, and now grandfather just told the government that he is Martin Vanderhof, Jr. Dinner is served, and Mr. Kirby reluctantly defers his intense investigation of Ed's xylophone to go to the table. Penny warns him that he needs to be careful of his indigestion, but he replies: Bullshit! I don't have any indigestion, blintzes are covered. Back to the Theater of the 20th Century
