Unit 7 chemical reactions test answer key

I trained and worked in animal care and professional advice. I live in Lancashire, UK. Some breeds of dogs (such as the hound) originated so long ago that it is difficult to ascertain exactly where they were developed. For some breeds, the name is a clue to their place of birth, for example, the Norfolk terrier. Newer breeds can have a well-documented history, especially if a single breeder has decided with the purpose of creating a dog breed for a specific purpose or appearance. These are breeds that we can be quite sure to originate or that have been developed mainly in England. It will not be an exhaustive list, but it will contain well-known and lesser-known examples of English breeds. They were divided into the seven groups listed by the Kennel Club. Gundogs English Gundogs It is not surprising that the gundog group was bred to accompany their owners in a shot, being used to perfume (hunt and aim) game (usually birds) and recover the injured and dead game. Due to the popularity of hunting among the English nobility, many breeds of fire dogs were developed here. Other breeds in this group that I could have included are the clumber spaniel, the Sussex spaniel, the field spaniel, the springer spaniel, and the English setter.1. Curly coated retrieversThe curly-coated retriever is believed to have originated in England about 200 years ago. Various breeds will have contributed to its development such as barncini and perhaps the tweed water spaniel - an extinct breed. The curly-coated retriever is available in two colors; Black or liver (brown)It is a shooting dog and still used in gundog trials and by some game watchers, however the rise of the labrador retriever meant that the breed decreased in popularity as a shooting dog in the 20th century. The tight curly coat is waterproof and dries quite satisfactorily - it has been specially developed to recover the play from the water. It is now classed as a vulnerable native breed by the British Kennel Club.. Urtica retriever coated curly2. English Cocker SpanielsA very popular breed, the cocker spaniel was developed as a shooting dog for washing in particular. However it is easy to see how their eye-catching appearance and charm have gained their fans among pet dog owners and breeders. Now there are two strains with the cocker working and the show cocker that has differentiated a bit. English cocker spanielsnettlemere3. English pointersThe English pointer almost certainly has Spanish ancestors and in my opinion as a working dog its relatively thin short coat is perhaps better suited to the milder, drier climate in Spain than the wet and often cold UK. I've known quite a few pointers and chuckled at the description of the clubs of the English pointer kennel which is clearly more at home in the moors, where he in his true element. Those I knew were more at home curled up in a heap in a comfy bed and seemed quite horrified asked to go out in the rain or mud. English pointer with pupsnettlemere4. Flat coated retrieversThe flat coated retriever, despite being superficially similar to a golden retriever, is a lighter, lectern dog. It owes part of its appearance to the undulating retrievers of Newfoundland and imported. As a result they are known for their ability to recover from water and on land. The 19th century was a time when a significant number of breeds were developed in the gundog world. Hunting and filming were extremely popular passing times and large estates could afford to handle large dog kennels. Flat-coated retrievers became known around 1864 and quickly became popular for their ability to work. The modern flat coated retriever can be processed, shown and a family pet. Unlike spaniel breeds that have split into working lines and show lines, the flat coated retriever show can still hold its own as a shooting dog. Flat coated retriever (right side)nettlemere5. Golden RetrieversThe golden retriever is an extremely popular breed all over the world attractive, adaptable and susceptible. I discussed whether to count the breed as an English breed, because it has strong claims to be developed in Scotland although under the management of an English gentleman. The human father of the breed was Lord Tweedmouth of Berwick on Tweed, who is firmly in England. One of the breeds he used was the Tweed water-spaniel popular in Northumberland and on the opposite side of the Tweed in Scotland. However he raised them in his Scottish home, the Guisachan Estate, so they are truly of Scottish origin. I sneaked them anyway. It's hard to resist a golden retriever! Golden retriever nettlemere English Pastoral Breeds Pastoral BreedsSome of the pastoral breedsSome of the pastoral breeds, such as border collie, have been developed to breed cattle such as sheep and cattle. They are renowned for their endurance and intelligence others such as the Pyrenean mountain dog were bred to live with the flock and guard them from predators. These tend to be less active but with a strong guard instinct. 6. Old English sheepdogsAlthough its name indicates that the old English shepherd dog is an archetypal English breed that almost certainly had European breeds such as the cable-coated Bergamasco in its development These were bred to lighter coated shepherd dogs from England. However, the end result still has a very abundant and instantly recognizable coat. Despite being supposedly bred for sheep processing, I did not come across any evidence that they are still used as a working breed. They have recently been entered on the watch list with British kennel club, as the number of old English shepherd dog puppies registered each year has decreased. Old English shepherd dog with shortnettlemere cut coat7. Heelers lancashireThe Heeler of Lancashire is a pastoral breed that was almost lost until in the 1980s no effort was made to of the breed by people like Jean Lanning, a breeder and international judge of the dog. They are still listed as a vulnerable native breed, but the numbers are healthier especially in their home county of Lancashire.In a corgi-like mold that were originally cattle dogs and would have harry cattle along by nipping their heels when needed, so that they can be quite exuberant. They also have resistance.8. Border ColliesBorder collies can claim to be a truly British race rather than an English one. They originated in the hilly region where sheep were bred, so Wales, Scotland and northern England contributed to the breed. Although they are an active breed, there is a noticeable difference between the strain of the show and the strains of work that are still widely used on farms around the world. The show enjoys a lot of exercise and mental stimulation, but this requirement has more than doubled in a work dog that would really need some sort of work to do, such as agility training, even as a pet. Border collienettlemere English Hounds HoundsHounds were bred for hunting and killing specific prey whether rabbits, deer foxes or wolves. Some, such as greyhound, have been bred with resistance to hunt from perfume in herds, while others, such as greyhound, have been bred for speed and more often hunt alone or in pairs. Other breeds I could have introduced to us are the beagle, otter, and whippet.9. FoxhoundsThe foxhound is listed as perhaps the most vulnerable Native English breed without puppies registered at the kennel club last year. They have always been many working dogs for fox hunting, with few kept as pets despite their friendly temperaments. Maybe people are put off by their reputation for stubbornness and resistance. Despite the lack of recordings with the kennel club there are still packages of foxhounds kept hunting. Strictly speaking, dog hunting has been illegal in the UK since the Hunting Act 2004 was passed, but packages can hunt a human runner laying a trail.10. HoundsThe hound has been bred in England since before 1300, which gives it a strong claim to be an English breed. The literature indicates that there were probably Belgian dogs used in the development of the breed, so there may be a claim further back that it is of European origin. Although originally bred for deer and wild boar hunting, the exceptional segugio tracking capability was soon recognized as useful for tracking humans - initially criminals. In the United Kingdom there are now a number of hounds kept hunting. Usually this takes the form of hunting a human runner who leaves in front of the dogs that gives a track to follow. I enjoyed watching the Readyfield Hounds on foot on a couple of occasions, but I was never sure enough to jump to join them on horseback. Segugionettlemere11. Greyhounds I might have a on my hands listing the greyhound as an English breed. Greyhound dogs are probably one of the earliest known breeds as they are depicted in ancient Egyptian tombs and Roman pottery. However from these original dogs long-legged dogs were developed from most of the area or countries, with the result that the Ibiza hound, saluki (from the Middle East), sloughi from North Africa, greyhound in England and many others. Greyhound was already well known in England in the Middle Ages. For example, King Canute made laws in 1014 allowing greyhounds to be possessed and driven out of nobility alone. Any ordinary person hanged from owning a greyhound would be severely punished. The modern greyhound is more popular as a racing dog then as a show dog, but the valiant efforts of greyhound charities to raise the profile of the breed as a pet have caused an increasing number of ex-racing greyhounds to find their way into the comfort of home life and happily swap the racecourse for a comfortable sofa. English Terriers TerrierS An exuberant group of mostly small and medium-sized breeds that were raised to chase and often to kill animals that were considered pests. Other breeds I could have included are the Airedale terrier, English bull terrier and miniature bull terrier, fox terriers, lakeland terrier, Manchester terrier, and dandie dinmont terrier.12. Staffordshire Bull TerrierThe Staffordshire bull terrier, affectionately known as stirrups, is one of the most popular breeds in the UK at the moment. Unfortunately this also means that it is the breed most commonly found in dog rehoming centers throughout the country. Bracket-like dogs and known as bull terriers, existed in the 17th century as a breed for use in dog fighting which was popular and legal at the time. In 1835 the dog fight was made illegal and at this point some dog breeders in the English county of Staffordshire decided to preserve the breed as a show dog and pet. He then became known as the Staffordshire bull terrier. The breed had always been known for its sweet nature towards humans and is one of the few breeds to have a breed standard that specifies that it is good with children. The breed is available in a wide variety of solid colors and also color spots on a white coat. Staffordshire Bull Terrier13. Norfolk and Norwich Terriers Norfolk and the Norwich Terrier are two delightful breeds of small terriers developed in the same area - Norwich is the town in Norfolk County in the east of England. Originally they were robust terriers used to control the rat population. The easiest way to distinguish between the two is that the terriers have pungent ears (such as the bell tower of Norwich Cathedral) and norfolk terriers have semi-eette ears that are distinctly floppy. They were only divided into two breeds in 1964 - so they are really quite similar in everything except in the ear in the ear Terriersnettlemere14. Jack Russell and Parson Russell Terriers From Victorian times, England had been home to a strain of terriers known as Jack Russells. They were generally a mix of white and one or two other colors, they could be short-legged or long-legged and coated rough or smooth. They were very popular, but not recognized by the rules of the kennel club. They came from dogs bred by the Reverend John Russell (1795–1883) who was also instrumental in the breeding lines of smooth fox terriers. After his death, enthusiasts kept the breed as close as possible to the reverend's ideals until in 1990 the kennel club formally recognized the breed and in 1999 settled on the parson russell terrier name to differentiate itself from uns registered Jack Russell terriers throughout the country. Jack Russell Terriernettlemere15. Border TerrierSAs the name suggests, the border terrier originated on the borders of England and Scotland, however it has been particularly associated with border hunting in Northumberland which is the English side of the border, so it can count as an English breed. They were bred with resistance for fox hunting. They would accompany the hunters with fox hounds and if the fox had entered a burrow the border terrier would chase and hunt or bark to indicate where the fox could be dug. Now they are popular as pets and as long as they are introduced to cats since puppies will happily live by their side. Potential owners should keep in mind their resistance and terrier nature. They can be small, but they enjoy a lot of exercise and can show interest in rat hunting. Border terrier puppynettlemere English Working Dog Breeds Working Dog BreedsThe working group contains breeds that have been developed primarily for surveillance and struggle such as the mastiff or to pull sleds such as alaskan malamute. Only one breed of the working group can claim to have been developed in Britain and this is the English mastiff, known here just as mastiff.16. English mastiffsThe mastiff is the largest breed of English dogs and one of the oldest. Roman writers have commented on mastiff-type dogs, some of which were taken for fighting in the 'games' held at the Amphitheater in Rome (The Kennel Club). They were traditionally used for fighting and surveillance. Mastiff is originally a French name, however this does not mean that the English mastiffs originated in France, only that the Norman conquest had them renamed, as well as many other things, as the conquered English took back parts of the new language. From the point of view of color, mastiffs are most commonly seen in fawn with black masking, but they can also be apricots or like Hooch in the picture. English Toy Dog Breeds Toy Dog Breeds Toy dog breeds have often been developed by breeds that originally had a job to do such as terriers and spaniels. However their appeal as companions began to prevail over everything else and began to select for company qualities and cuteness. All toy breeds are very small or small. Other toy breeds I could have introduced to us are the Yorkshire terrier, King Cavalier Charles spaniel, and King Charles spaniel.17. English Toy TerriersThis beautiful breed desires a bit like a miniature doberman with the delicacy of an Italian greyhound. It has existed since the 19th century when he was known for his skills as a rat killer. However during its conversion into a companion breed it was selected for smaller sizes and reduced prey units. The breed is always available only in black and tan. The kennel club lists the English toy terrier as a vulnerable native breed, meaning not many puppies are registered every year. In 2006, only 103 ETT puppies were registered. English Utility Dog Breeds Utility BreedsUtility is the group for the dog breed that doesn't really fit anywhere else, so it's a diverse group including akita, barodle, and shih tzus. It contains only one breed developed in England, but it is perhaps the most famous English breed of all the bulldog; also known as british or English bulldogs.18. BulldogThe fact that the bulldog is listed in the utility group rather than in the working group is an indication of how far it came from its roots as a dog for the bait of bulls and the struggle of dogs in the 17th century. The modern breed is shorter and more squat and unfortunately can suffer from breathing difficulties and be prone to heat stress due to its crushed nose. However, a companion is much more congenial than the fighting dog from which he descended and I am a charismatic breed.CommentsJohn Spencer on May 20, 2020:Where is the Airedale ? LKPiü01 on May 7, 2013:Voted and Fantastic. Nettlemere. This is an informative and fun hub comprehensive, well laid out on a topic that many of us happen to LOVE! Good job. Rebecca Mealey from Northeast Georgia, USA on May 7, 2013:What a great cover of different breeds of dogs ... it is not difficult to understand why the great HOTD honor was bestowed upon you. Good job! Deb Welch on May 7, 2013:Great Hub. Totally excellent - accurate - interesting and very well done. You earned the HOTD. The Border Terrier - he had a lot to say - nice dog. Appreciated. Awesome.Marcy J. Miller from Arizona on May 7, 2013:I loved this, Nettlemere - it's definitely worthy of HOTD recognition. I was stunned and saddened to see that no Foxhound was recorded for a year. They evoke such an image of great English country houses, well-appointed pilots and athletic thoroughbreds coursing green fields. I hope there's always a place for them. (I am partial, since my long childhood companion was a Foxhound cross.) What a great job on your hub! Yvonne Spence from the UK on 07 May 2013:Congratulations on your HOTD! Some of these dogs are so cute - especially the curly-coated retriever! Better yourself from North Carolina up 07, 2013:Congratulations on Hub of the Day! Beautiful dogs, great hub! I have a mix Jack Russell and Jack Russell/Chihuahua both with a lot of energy!summerberrie on May 7, 2013:Great hub. What beautiful animals. We are the proud owner of a hound! Sometimes we are an embarrassed owner, but we always love her. Beautifully done and great information. Congratulations on HOTD. Marcy Goodfleisch - Planet Earth on May 7, 2013:I love your animal experience! I learned so much from your hubs - thank you for sharing your knowledge! Congratulations on the HOTD - so well deserved! Jason Licerio from the Philippines on May 7, 2013:PUGS! Now I know I'm not an English race. Great hub!german83 from Buenos Aires, Argentina on May 7, 2013:Great Hub!!! I have a Beagle, too. All I can say about them is that they always want to eat something. You have to keep an eye on their weight... Mary Craig from New York on May 7, 2013:It's easy to see how this hub made HOD! Such complete information about each of the breeds you wrote about and your photos are super! How did you take pictures of so many breeds? Voted, useful and interesting.whonunuwho from the United States on May 7, 2013:Beautiful animals, all, and well done in your photos and writing. A lot to learn about many animals. whonutraderjim on May 7, 2013:Interesting. But am I the only one who also appreciates half-breed dogs? Robie Benve from Ohio on February 27, 2013:Wow, so much information here about those adorable breeds and wonderful photos to share! Great job and thank you for sharing. :)Vinaya Ghimire from Nepal on February 24, 2013:This is very interesting. I learned so much here.Nettlemere (author) from Burnley, Lancashire, UK on February 22, 2013:Thank you for reading Dr Mark - I suspect foxhound may be more common now in America than it is here. Suhail - thank you for commenting - I like the English setter and I'm going to fill in the gaps at some point, but the hub was getting long and I thought it would be better to publish it! Bac2basics - I agree that KC breed standards can cause real problems for dogs, as well as trends among purebred judges about exactly what they are looking for. Eddy - thank you for sharing. Maybe I should have included the previous photo of the OES - he had joined the RSPCA terribly shaggy and a group of us spent an afternoon shaving it. He was so patient with us.aviannovice - I'm glad you like it, I suspect some of the breeds aren't available in America, so you probably don't see them. I know there are quite a few American races that we don't go here. Suhail Zubaid aka Clark Kent of Mississauga, ON on February 21, 2013:In addition to my previous comment. I'm sorry I didn't the English setter though :)Deb Hirt from Stillwater, OK on February 20, 2013:This was very well done and enjoyable. I learned about some dogs I didn't know. Know. from Wales on 19 February 2013:I loved this hub and I'm saving all my favorite animal hubs and this is definitely one. I've never seen an Old English sheepdog tightly shaved before na dl was pleasantly surprised. Enjoy your day and I vote and share. Eddy.Anne from Spain on February 19, 2013:Hi Nettlemere. What an interesting hub this is. I agree with what you said that the English indication is better suited to the Spanish climate. I often see pointer-type dogs around here and also the Spanish Podenco during the hunting season (which I hate) Also I am not in favor of the demanding standards applied by the kennel club and feel that this causes suffering, deformity and disease in many breeds. However, a large and interesting Hub N :)Suhail Zubaid aka Clark Kent of Mississauga, ON on February 18, 2013:English Foxhound may return to be required a few decades along the way when the fox population grows disproportionately and there will be a need to hunt some from time to time.-:) Dr Mark from The Atlantic Rain Forest, Brazil on February 18, 2013:Very interesting and thorough. I didn't even realize how things were going for the Foxhound. I voted and shared. Sharing.
