Colorado River toads are the largest indigenous species of toads in North America reaching an adult size of 11-17 cm (4.5-7 inches). Metamorphosis babies circa 1.5 cm; In two weeks, they'll double their size! They have smooth skin compared to other toad species with some raised bumps. Their color moves in olive green, sometimes brown with frequent small orange or brown spots. At the end of the mouth is a white wart, they have large ear drums and orange eyes with vertical black chives. Important information: The paratoid glands are large and along with the current glands on the hind legs there will be a very toxic fluid secretion. It contains 5-MeO-DMT (5-sweety-dimethyltrypta) which is a powerful psychedelic repetitive. These skin secretions also contain Bufotenin, a tryptamine associated with neurotransmitter serotonin and is similar in chemical structure to psilocin psilocin, an alkaloid and psychedelic fungus. These toxins are used as self-defense against predators. Therefore, always use caution and hands wash when dealing with toads or items in the compound! Where are the Colorado River toads from? They lie in both desert and semi-arid outgrans, usually always close to the water. As the name suggests, they're in the under. The Gilo River in Southeast California, New Mexico, Mexico and much of southern Arizona. They will hide in rodent forgiveness during the day and leave to hunt at night. How do you keep colorado river toads? Colorado River toads are a hard species to maintain if a few simple steps follow. These toads grow large, so provide adequate space, especially if you keep some together. We recommend a glass container at least 4ft, ensuring it has a secure lid as they are strong and can escape easily. Using glass terrarium, the front opening doors allow access to feeding and maintenance. The top has a mesh lid that allows lighting and heating to be placed on top. The squeak should have a depth of 3-4 inches to allow natural asphyxiation during the daytime heat. You can use a variety of substrate's from coir, cypress mulch (zoo med forest floor) and sands. With a blend of ProRep Life series and cypress straw, you can create a natural look. Throughout the day, Colorado River toads will use the rodent den to abandon, hide under or inside rock crests or dig into a stamp. Daytime temperatures should range from 24-26C (74-80F) and are allowed to drop to 13-18C (55-65F) overnight. It's in these cool night temperatures when they emerge to eat. Some people say that UVB lighting is not essential however we use it on all our animals as we believe they gain natural light. Although Colorado river toads are known as desert species, water is very important and should always be supplied as they naturally live close to water and should not be allowed to be dried. A fog in the evening will encourage them to leave food safety. They'll eat pretty much anything you give them from a variety of live insects to reconvly rodents. Caution should be taken as they can be overweight. As with all exotic pets, dust the food with vitamin and mineral powder twice a week and the remaining feeds on calcium. Do your research before committing to buying any pet, please do your own independent research.
