The suit also hints at racial slurs, I would strongly recommend navy federal. Everyone is so helpful and feels proud to serve men and women in uniform. The company's mission is members and employee success. Management is very transparent and grateful to people. Exploring the company's outdated systems and working on transformation is the best part of working here. Much more change comes this year, which will spur many initiatives in digital and contact center space next year, especially towards better customer service for members. Employee benefits are the best in the industry 401k match, competitive wages, work life and balance. Was this review helpful? In front of ex-military/ex-government leadership and executives, the Navy's Federal Credit Union is bureaucratic, change-resistant, micromanaged and saturated with corrupt domestic politics. That's the way we've always done things! is a popular mantra within the FEDERAL Navy, and it shows throughout the organizational culture. True talents and innovative contributions are rarely rewarded; instead, they are often punished and building relationships promotes nepotistic degrees. Career advancement and transition to other internal positions is a matter of who you know, how well you know them, and how much your manager loves or doesn't like you. Units and subdivisions are started throughout the organization by communication barriers and without cooperation. In particular, employees of a lower level manager (at least in marketing and communications) are prohibited from emailing senior executives/managers without the permission of their senior management. The Federal Navy's technology infrastructure mainly consists of archaic, fragile and non-intuitive systems. The fact that we still use IBM Lotus Notes to manage email and calendar speaks volumes alone. Again, that's the way things have always been! Working remotely or from home is grim throughout the organization, even if we have the means to do so (laptops, company mobile phones, etc.). The mentality we want to see you in your chair working at all times during business hours comes from former Vice Admiral Cutler Dawson and his personal vendée against telework. Given the number of others - more... Was this review helpful? The Federal Navy places great value on tenure over merit and uses its advantages to try to disguise the situation. It's hard to feel valued or see any career developmentMive this review is useful? Useful?
