We know how it goes. Once you abandon the cheap brands of pharmacies and start springing up for higher quality products, stop trying out the least expensive options because your brain is telling you that the lowest price = lower quality. Wrong! You'd be surprised how much some of the less expensive brands can be compared to some of the top-of-the-line brands. In our list below, we'll take a look at some of the best loose powder options to help you find one that works with your skin. Don't you know where to start? We will help you from start to finish. We covered you from the forehead of your collarbones! Finishing & Setting - What's the difference? There's a small difference, though many might use them interchangeably if they both have them in their makeup bag. Finishing powder. These are designed to go to the top of all the other tricks you've already applied (dust setting included). Most of them are translucent and also help everything (pores, fine lines, etc.) but they are not essential for the average user. They are useful for major events, which is why so many celebrities use them when they are on camera or on the red carpet. Some might use a finishing powder to make up, but this usually leads to a makeup disaster. Type celebrity makeup disaster into any search engine and let the results speak for themselves! Dust setting. As the name suggests, this helps you set any of the liquids you have already applied to your face, mainly the foundation. They are available in loose or pressed powder. These help you eliminate shine and help the foundation last longer. Dust setting is essential in any makeup bag and finishing powder is optional. Some can be used for both (such as the number 4 below) since they are colored, but if you are using a white/translucent powder, this should only be used finishing powder. Top 10 loose powder comparison tableWhy do you choose loose powder on pressed? Or vice versa! What are the pros and cons of all kinds of dust? Let's compare them:Loose. If you are looking for a light cover, a loose powder is the right choice. In general, those who better with oily skin since they help reduce shine without adding extra oil (pressed powders contain more oil), but if you have dry skin it could make you look shaky. Unfortunately, loose powders do not travel well since they are so messy. You may have a loose powder you keep at home and a pressed powder to travel. Pressed. Pressed powders have a denser consistency because they contain more oil than loose powders. This is useful when you need to hide imperfections or for touch-ups during the day. If you have oily skin, these are probably not the right option for you since they can end up making your skin cakey. These can easily go into your bag or on the go, and you never have to worry about them spilling everywhere once they open. The 3 best reviews of loose powder1. Laura Mercier Loose Setting Powder We love that this environment powder by Laura Mercier is oil-free and translucent, which means it continues to pure and won't leave you with a dusty white look. It also has a very fine texture, so if you're looking for something that gives you a simple and natural look (and you probably are), then this is the best loose powder on our list. It works on all skin types and really helps prevent shine on those of you with oily skin. Laura Mercier seems to have found the perfect combination of ingredients for this amazing powder! It's expensive, but it's a bit of a long way. You'll be using this powder for quite a while before you need a recharge!2. Bare Escentuals Mineral Veil Minerals So it was a great environmental powder, but what about a finishing powder? Many still love bare escentuals mineral veil powder and we have to say that we agree. It gives you that soft, smooth and natural glow on the skin and absorbs the oils to prevent shine. It's really like a veil on your skin: evening all out and providing you with an impeccable skin look. It does not contain parabens, sulfates, artificial fragrances, synthetic, petrochemical or phthalate dyes. A great finishing powder in the average price range!3. Innisfree No-Sebum Mineral Powder If you like mint, you will like this Innisfree finishing powder. Mint is the secret to controlling oil, which is great for those of you who have trouble keeping those problem areas without shine. This is a mineral powder that does not contain parabens, mineral oils, artificial fragrances, artificial pigments, talcs or animal ingredients. Some use it as setting powder and others as finishing powder. We recommend using it as expected, as finish It is white (not translucent), so if you set the makeup with it you risk looking like you have just finished cooking in the kitchen all day. Use the powder lightly to leave you with a smooth and smooth appearance. It's a long way! Way! Way!
