I confess that the longest period of my work here was technically an OPS translator; However, I was treated as a team member, with free education and certification options, paid leave, employee comp., and free access to technology and seminars. Culture is very positive and encouraging. Although I've heard that culture has changed with time (every job does not exist), FSDB is still one of the best places to work in Florida! LPN overnight school nurse in Saint Augustine, FL • Work-life balanceCompared PTO/personal time • Pay and receive benefitsPayment was not good. It is not comparable to any other work I do, not with the correct living wage of a nurse. Also, the health benefits of public work were not very good. • Overall, Work was very easy compared to most nursing jobs. PTO/personal time was generous. The hours were good. But wages were not a good living wage or were similar to any nursing jobs I ever had. You do as you can pay. Teaching assistant saint augustine, FLsupportive collaborators, good benefits, hard advance school in general is a good place to work. Nowhere else had better collaborators. The children are the coolest, and I was lucky enough to spend my working days observing them growing up. It was difficult for me to advance my position myself. When hired, it was thought that there would be opportunities to fork out into something else, but that was not the case. Residential instructor in Saint Augustine, FLGreat people work. Schedules are known and kept never for any random changes. It's clear from work. Managers are understanding and easy to communicate. Residential instructor in Saint Augustine, FLRewarding on the fact that he could work with deaf and blind students. But the hours were terrible and a lot of politics. There was definitely division. Not what was expected when he took the position. Be sure to negotiate your payPeople asked 7 questions about working at a Florida school for the deaf and blind.
